Bernard Shaw Unmasks Plan of Britain to Destroy Germany

Dr. George Bernard Shaw, the great British writer and publicist, has treated in his series of articles, of which this is the fourth, the diplomatic entanglements of the British Foreign office which made it impossible to tell the truth in regard to the course adopted by England toward Germany. He declared that his (Shaw's) "Peace for Europe plan had been spurned and that Asquith had no policy." He said that "up to the last Sir Edward Grey clung to sheepskin. That the conflict would have been put off if Germany had been warned that British intervention was certain.

The preceding article telling the story of England's diplomatic entanglements concluded with the following:

"I can quite conceive myself taking Lord Grey's course.

"In his place, if the war had come it was important that it should come before the German fleet was as powerful as the British, and England can hardly be reproached for fighting and conquering instead of contriving that Germany should exhaust herself in a struggle with Russia, from which she might well have emerged more formidable than ever.

"But England cannot claim both the laurel and the olive.

"If she did everything to postpone the war except the thing that might conceivably have postponed it, history will certainly conclude that she did not postpone it simply because at bottom she did not want to postpone it. It is significant that nobody—British imperialist or other—put any heart into preventing it.

London, Jan. 29.—The reader will now fully understand the burst of feeling against the government which the outbreak of the war provoked.

In the British Parliament, among those who had not been in the secret, the old Liberal Non-interventionists were furious at having been duped. The labor leaders raged because a compact which involved the lives of millions of

MALDEN PLANT WIPED OUT BY $50,000 FIRE

Fire wiped out the bleach room, dye-house and "white building" of the Cochrane Manufacturing Company at Malden today, and caused a property loss of $50,000. The origin of the fire is unknown.

The blaze started in the "white building," a wooden structure in which cotton goods are stored. This building was razed, and the fire spread to the bleach room and dye-house. The main building, in which manufacturing operations are carried on, was saved only after rapid work under adverse circumstances by the fire department. Two alarms were sounded.

Eighty employes will be temporarily out of work while the damages is being repaired. The loss is covered by insurance, it is stated. The factory is between Barrett lane and Mountain avenue.

CHICAGO FOOD PRICES TAKE ANOTHER SLUMP

Chicago, Jan. 29.—Butter, eggs, cheese and potatoes took another slump in the wholesale markets here, while the United States grand jury continued its investigation of retailers who have failed to give consumers the benefit of the break in prices which started ten days ago.

Butter could be had on commission now at 45 cents a pound less than twenty-four hours previous, the best grades being quoted at 48½ cents to 52 cents by the tub and 53½ cents by the print.

Eggs went at 49 cents in large quantities, or 56 to 57 cents a dozen to the retailer, a drop of 6½ cents.

Cheese dropped eight to nine cents, the best American selling to retailers at 38 cents. Potatoes went down five cents a hundred pounds, selling to retailers at from $1.70 to $1.75 per hundred.

ENVOYS IN CONFLICT ON SECRET TREATIES

CRISIS IN BRITISH LABOR

Fifty Thousand More in England Strike in 24 Hours; 100,000 Out in Belfast

London, Jan. 29.—Three hundred thousand men and women workers are on strike in Great Britain today, 50,000 additional workers joining the movement during the past twenty-four hours.

These walkouts, which have been unofficially called, are sweeping the whole country, and it is feared that the movement will continue to grow.

One hundred thousand men and women are out at Belfast, where the strike is general.

"The present labor situation is so serious that both the labor leaders and the employers should prepare to make a stand or reconstruction will be made impossible and competitive nations will become firmly established, to the detriment of our national industries," said G. H. Roberts, labor leader and statesman.

"Ultimately labor, as well as those who are looking to strikes to effect a social revolution, are doomed to disappointment."

The London newspapers are devoting considerable attention to the suggestion of Sir Eric Geddes, First Lord of the Admiralty, that the trade unions experiment by running the industries for labor.

There is much excitement in Belfast. The streets of the city are filled with processions and music by the day time, but with gloom and chaos at night. Bands of hooligans at nights parade the darkened streets throwing stones and looting. The police today eventually managed to restore order in the centre of the city after several charges in which they used their clubs.

There are 12,000 dockers out in this city; 10,000 workmen on the Clyde and in western Scotland; 14,000 miners in the West Lothian collieries; 11,000 more miners in South Wales; 5,500 ship workers at Edinburgh and Leith, and 10,000 more shipworkers at Teeside.

The Manchester dockers and the Fifeshire miners are returning to work.

COLONIES MAY SPLIT CONCLAVE

Anglo-Jap Pact on Pacific Islands Revealed by Paris Paper

By NEWTON C. PARKE.
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Paris, Jan. 29.—The peace delegates are discussing a plan to give Great Britain and the British dominions, as well as other powers, practical control of the German colonies, the Paris edition of the London Daily Mail stated today.

The suggestion has been made that the creation of a League of Nations abrogates certain secret treaties which are now being revealed, but the beneficiaries are opposed to any such step, it was said.

In the colonial discussions the idea of President Wilson for internationalization of Germany's former overseas dominions was given full recognition.

The Paris edition of the Daily Mail publishes the gist of secret treaties which, the paper says, are hampering the new diplomacy.

The first treaty is between England, France and Italy, of the Adriatic coast. It conflicts violently with the Jugo-Slav interests.

The second treaty signed between England and Japan by which the latter gets all Germany's islands in the Pacific.

The third treaty is between England and the king of the Hedjaz by which the latter was to get Damascus from Turkey.

"DO YOU DRINK?" ASKS MAN OF GIRL IN LOVE SUIT

Miss Lillian Bradley of New York, who charges Harry E. Robinson of Commonwealth avenue with breach of promise and asks $100,000. Mr. Robinson in fifty-one interrogatories filed in Superior Court, asks, among other things, whether the plaintiff was ever married.

Harry E. Robinson of Commonwealth avenue, defendant in an $100,000 breach of promise suit brought against him by Lillian Bradley of New York city, has filed fifty-one interrogatories in the Superior Court which he desires Miss Bradley to answer.

One of the allegations in the declaration of Miss Bradley is that Robinson, at the Copley-Plaza Hotel on March 10, 1917, promised to marry her during the first week of June in that year, and Robinson wants Miss Bradley to be ordered to specify at what time of night, or day and in what part of the hotel the promise was made.

Mr. Robinson also wants Miss Bradley to state her exact age, her place of residence, what is her vocation or profession, what her income has been from her vocation or profession, and what her income has been from all sources whatsoever. She is further asked if she were ever married, if she has been divorced, if she has children, and if so, do they live with her.

"Do you drink intoxicating liquor?" is one of the questions propounded to Miss Bradley, and if so, how long she has used liquor, and if she ever drank with Robinson.

Miss Bradley will have to say whether she knows one Francis E. Smith and one Ollie Schneider, if she ever asked Robinson to perform the contract to marry her, and in what form she asked and in what form he refused.

FIRST REAL SNOWSTORM OF THE SEASON IS ON

Huge snow flakes the size of quarters whirled down on the office workers as they hurried from train and subway today in the first real snowstorm of the Winter. Long idle goloshes were requisitioned by commuters, as the snow began falling in the early morning. When they awoke the ground was covered. Then came more snow until even the downtown section of Boston was white. The weather man is puzzled, as he predicted fair weather for today with a clear conscience. To allbi himself he says the snow is liable to stop falling any minute.

GIRL, 14, TO TELL OF TRAGEDY

Pastor Seized With Fit of Despondency as Young Daughter Appears

Saco, Me., Jan. 29.—Frances Hall, 14-year-old daughter of Rev. Henry H. Hall, on trial for the murder of his wife, will confront her father as a witness for the State. She has already been sworn to testify.

The State's announcement that she would testify came almost like a physical blow to the clergyman, and his lively interest in the proceedings was replaced for a time by a fit of despondency. As she passed his chair, however, he looked stonily past her and gave no sign of recognition.

Frances Hall, the daughter, is an immature child for her years, and the shadow which has fallen across her life has not affected her spirits materially. She watches the proceedings of the jury with considerable interest.

NEW EMOTIONAL ELEMENT.

Her presence at the trial and her purpose here have injected into the case another emotional element not lost upon the actors and spectators in the drama. The jurors turn often to look at the pale face, and big eyes of the child whose happiness has been so rudely interrupted.

SHAW WRITES OF SECRET WAR DIPLOMACY OF BRITAIN

men had been made behind the backs of those men, and the Russian alliance was loathsome to them.

Lord Morley and Mr. Trevelyan, with John Burns, wiped the dust of the government from their feet. Socialist Internationalists, like Messrs. Ramsay MacDonald, Snowden and Anderson, made up their minds that though the German Junkers must be brought down, they should be brought down on the heads of the British junkers who had planned the war.

The press branded all the malcontents as pro-Germans and described them as hunted fugitives, but the enormous applause with which they were received in large popular meetings and congresses showed that the working classes were not hoodwinked as completely as the middle classes.

To avoid a defeat of the government in face of the enemy, Mr. Asquith had to make another secret compact, this time with the opposition leaders, who agreed to support him against his deserters on condition that he surrendered all points in controversy between them for the duration of the war.

But this did not save him for long. The opposition soon wearied of allowing the Liberals all the credit of conducting the war and the loaves and fishes of office as well. They betrayed the compact to the country and forced a coalition on him.

This revelation finished Mr. Asquith's career. A secret understanding with France to defeat German ambition was one thing, a secret plot with Lord Lansdowne and Bonar Law to throw over the Liberal program was quite another. The strain was too great.

Mr. Lloyd George, who has come into the war party at the twelfth hour on the popular but really quite irrelevant issue of the violation of Belgian neutrality, not only became Prime Minister and war lord in place of Mr. Asquith, but presently threw him out of the coalition as a negligible quantity, Lord Grey being kicked upstairs out of the Foreign Office into the House of Lords.

One would have supposed that both of the discarded statesmen would have waited only for the signing of the armistice to turn the tables on their supplanter by claiming and posting that they and Lord Haldane had, in spite of the pro-Boer, Lloyd George, planned and executed the magnificently successful stroke which had rescued the British empire from the contempt into which its very poor military record in the South African war had plunged it and restored it to its ancient glory as the most formidable power in the world and the arbiter of Europe.

But having drifted into their policy on the French initiative, and carried it out with true English empiricism, they knew not what they did. Lord Haldane, who did know, did not let himself entirely loose until after the election.

Yet it was on a hint from a speech of his that Mr. Asquith, three days before the poll, suddenly made a belated bid for public support as the man to whom England owed her perfect preparation for the war.

Bid for Support Suppressed.

But as he had sedulously stuffed the public for four years with the legend that England had been utterly unprepared for the war and had never harbored a thought of unkindness to Germany, and as, further, the Northcliffe press immediately suppressed his bid as completely as they suppressed the speeches of men like Ramsay MacDonald, nobody noticed Mr. Asquith's volte face, and he was heavily defeated in his contest for the seat he had held easily for thirty years.

THE DAY AFTER ELECTION LORD HALDANE, IN A LONG LETTER TO THE TIMES, WHICH THAT PAPER WOULD HAVE REFUSED TO PUBLISH SIX MONTHS EARLIER, EVEN IF LORD HALDANE COULD HAVE BEEN INDUCED TO WRITE IT, AT THE RISK OF SHAKING THE BRITISH MORALE, TORE AWAY THE LAST SHREDS OF THE GREAT CAMOUFLAGE, AND THE LION OF WATERLOO AT LAST STOOD REVEALED WITH THE SHEEPSKIN AND THE ASS SIDE FLUNG OFF, AND THE ONCE TERRIBLE KAISER HELPLESS IN HIS CLAWS.

Nine hundred thousand Britons lay dead around the pedestal, but Britannia did not grudge the price. She will never ask Lord Haldane: "What hast thou done with my legions?"

Unfortunately, the empiricism of Britannia, which enabled her to do all this bit by bit without connecting one bit with another and thereby arriving at a clear consciousness of her policy, now prevents her from seeing that, having thrown over the pretence that she was innocently unprepared for the war, she cannot now come to the Peace Conference in an attitude of virtuous indignation founded on that pretence.

When I said in November, 1914, that as far as preparing for the war and drinking to "Der Tag" was concerned, it was as between the German army and the British navy six of one and half a dozen of the other, I was reviled as the most abandoned of the traitors.

Demand Murder of Kaiser.

It now appears that I did my side an injustice.

I should have said six of one and, say, four and a half of the other, the odd one and a half being with Britannia. But Britannia has not as yet put two things together. Her press and her politicians still denounce Germany for the crime of preparing for war in the very same breath with which they are cheering Lord Haldane for having outprepared the Germans.

Even comparatively respectable and thoughtful magazines, like the Round Table, mechanically reprint articles about the criminal destruction Germany has wrought by invasions, raids and submarine piracy.

The blackguards of England, a noisy and not, I hope, numerous body, which has been tolerated and encouraged during the war to a disgraceful and dangerous extent, are openly demanding the murder of the Kaiser, the sack of every German town and the subsequent enslavement of the German people by impossible ransoms for centuries to come.

It is easy to tell these people that we were stronger and cleverer than the Germans, and that the press photograph of the British lion as half sheep, half donkey, was a fake. It is less popular to tell them that the German devil is just as absurd a fable as the British angel.

They want to revel in the consciousness of being victorious, successful and powerful—shocking humbugs, if you will, but mighty crafty born rulers of men—yet they do not want to give the Germans fair play. They want moral excuses for skinning them alive, and on this point they must be recklessly tackled and held back and made to behave themselves.

If no British statesman has courage and character enough to bully them, Mr. Wilson must. If not, they will produce a world situation in which anti-British combinations will be formed which I dare not describe in detail for they might spring into being at the flourish of a pen, if that pen were too explicit.

Suffice it to say that the destruction of Germany's prestige has left the British empire in the position formerly held by her defeated foe, namely, that of the most dangerous and dreaded imperial power left in the world. And as America has helped to place her there, it is now necessary to go carefully into America's position in the matter.

Says Wilson Is Out of Court.

It is clear that Mr. Wilson cannot go into the Peace Conference on the pretences the American press has picked up from the English press. The ultimatum to Serbia, the violation of the neutrality of Belgium, the attack on France, may be plausible points in the case of Britain, who went to war the moment Belgium was invaded, but the United States did not move in the matter and is, therefore, out of court as far as these particular counts in the indictment against Germany are concerned.

I, myself, made an appeal to the United States, in the form of an open letter to President Wilson, in 1914, in which, while carefully disclaiming the case founded on the treaty of 1839, which I knew could not be sustained, I suggested that the United States should intervene on behalf of Belgium on grounds of common humanity. But the United States remained out of the war and made a great deal of money out of the war until the submarine campaign produced a situation in which neutrality was no longer possible.

In this the United States behaved very prudently. They were able to give invaluable assistance to the allies as neutrals. When they drew the sword at last they were able to come in as the determining factor in the conflict, and thus make themselves the holders of the balance of power.

In the meantime they had rid themselves of all their financial indebtedness to Europe and compelled Europe to admit them to an immensely increased share of the carrying trade. They had strengthened the moral position of republicanism greatly by production, at the right moment, of a man who, like Washington and Lincoln, easily dominates the situation as the spokesman of the highest ideals, whilst British and French democrats could not rise above the rhetoric of the prize ring and the slop of the cinema sub-title.

Posing as Knight Errant.

Yet even as England, with a very strong case and a still stronger hand, had discounted both the strength of her case and the prestige of her strength by substituting a ridiculous melodrama for the truth, the United States seem equally incapable of understanding their own position and equally determined to pose as the knights errant of the distressed damsels who have been rescued from the dungeons of Kaiser Bill, the demon enchanter of Hunland.

They will have it that their swords leaped from their scabbards to avenge Edith Cavell, and that the tearing up of the scrap of paper, now repudiated by the Belgians themselves in the hour of their triumph, was to them as the rending of the veil of the temple.

All this is very silly and would make Mr. Wilson very ridiculous at Versailles if he attempted to impose it on his allies there, much less on the Germans.

The truth is, the foreign policy of the United States, like that of Britain, of France, of Germany, of Austria, of Italy, of Turkey, of Bulgaria, of Rumania, and all the other belligerents, has been not a romantic policy, but a policy of self-preservation. As such it will have to remain until the establishment of a super-national legislative tribunal and police makes it possible for nations to reject as the principle of their foreign policy the one principle that knows no law.

SEES WAR'S END IN PROGRESS OF MASSES

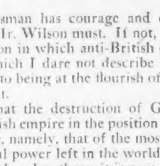
American Writer's Book Deals With Fundamentals of International Justice

By DR. E. J. DILLON.

Special cable to the Boston American and Philadelphia Public Ledger.

(Copyright in the United States and Canada by the Philadelphia Ledger Company. Copyright in Europe by London Daily Telegraph.)

Paris, Jan. 28.—Now that the various projects for the new society of nations are in contemplation, a remarkable book has appeared contributing a masterly presentation of the subject in all its manifold aspects. Thomas Raymond Crosby, is financial adviser to American delegation, who brings his scientific temper to the study of the sociological and political bearings involved. He traces the present necessity of the league to its source in the material, intellectual and moral progress of the masses, conscious of their overwhelming strength and unlimited to use it for satisfaction of pressing needs and who are patiently awaiting outcome of promises made by their leaders now foregathered in conference. The author, having cleared the ground by refuting the contention that wars are inevitable and showing that nobility of nations on a basis of right and justice is feasible, discusses the problem in all its bearings as political, social and economic. He places objectivity in the strongest light, meeting them squarely or dissolving intimate problems of detail.



DR. E. J. DILLON

INDISPENSABLE CONDITIONS.

The most interesting chapters of the work deal with conditions indispensable and adequate to the realization of the new ordering of human society and an examination of the compromise methods with the conference is supposed to favor. In handling the question that limitation of armaments by international agreement, conciliatory tribunals, postponement for 6 months in hope that the disputant nations will calm down, and even an engagement among governments binding each signatory to direct its independent forces against a recalcitrant state are all inadequate.

Unless each community makes partial sacrifice of its sovereignty in order to obviate a total sacrifice later on and agrees to accept the decrees of the supernational tribunal, backed by powerful supernational forces, no amelioration of the present ordering can be urged for.

TAKES HIGH RANK.

In this contention most thinkers whose vision is not distorted by the turbid passion of politics will concur. Among competing theories on the subject, Crosby's work, marked by expert thought and forcible expression, easily takes highest rank.

One fundamental objection, however, suggests itself to which the book offers no answer. That is, mechanical organization no doubt can bind nations together may be admitted as possible in the abstract, but whether it can be created without radical changes of views, aspirations and temper of those who represent the nations, and in some cases of nations themselves, may well be doubted.

It is conceivable that the great powers alone could accomplish this aim if they had such lively faith in the peremptory necessity and the complete adequacy of the scheme as would inspire them with courage to recommend it to their peoples as the sole means out of a situation fast becoming unbearable and dangerous.

But there are as yet no signs of the faith that removes mountains of prejudice and stimulates to sacrifice.

PROSECUTOR TRACES TRAGIC WALK OF PASTOR HALL AND WIFE

MARKS ON THROAT OF VICTIM

Discovery by Undertaker Recited to Jury in Trial of Maine Preacher

daughter the marital relations of the Halls have been unhappy, and the husband began to indulge in passing love affairs with other women.

The minister saw his mother in the courtroom for the first time since his examination at Kennebunk, and their greetings were not restrained by the curious eyes of the sensation-hungry spectators.

Something of a sensation was caused during the court session when County Attorney Willard, in outlining his case, declared that marks had been found on Mrs. Hall's throat—three on one side and as many more on the other. It was believed the State would try to show that there had been a struggle on the bridge and that Mrs. Hall had been seized by the throat.

HALL GREETS HIS FAMILY.

It was a sad little group that gathered when court adjourned and as the hurrying crowds of people scurried away into the dusk of the late afternoon.

Just as he turned away from the seat that he had occupied during all the long afternoon, Hall greeted his family. Every little while during the day he had turned his head and searched among the faces turned toward him for the face of his mother.

His brother was not less affected by the meeting than was the preacher himself. Gathered in earnest council together, they stood directly beneath the painting of Abraham Lincoln, the lowliness and with serious faces they talked. All too soon the hour for parting came, and all too soon the waiting sheriff stepped near to take the prisoner back to his cell in the Saco jail.

As his sad old mother kissed him again her lips trembled and tears ran down her face. His brother, too, kissed the prisoner—wiping the tears from his eyes as he did so.

FACE WET WITH TEARS.

As Hall passed the groups of watching newspaper men and women, pulling down his soft woolen cap close about his ears, his eyes were red and his face was wet with tears.

Throughout the day Hall appeared composed and outwardly calm. He has watched with the closest interest that any spectator would have as the jury was secured. Leaning forward, his cheek resting on the palm of his hand, in an attitude that is characteristic of him, he paid close attention to every word that was uttered.

Often he placed his hand above his ear, indicating that he failed to hear better.

The jury that will decide Hall's fate, is a jury of comparatively young men. The average age is forty-nine. Only one is unmarried. He is the youngest number five, Clyde R. L. Snow, who is a popcorn and candy vender at Old Orchard.

Following the securing of the jury, the indictment was read. As Hall listened, his expression never wavered, nor a flicker of interest flashed across his face.

OUTLINES HALL'S EARLY LIFE.

Former County Attorney Hiram Willard outlined the case for the State. In his opening he traced the early life of Hall, from his boyhood days in the town of Harrington, where he met and married Minnie O. Stevens. He spoke of the birth of the little daughter, Frances, to both and said that following her birth Hall engaged as a laborer and as a building man for four or five years. He then went to Brunswick to preach in a little village of Lisbon, and there his wife Minnie, followed him.

"We will show," continued Attorney Willard, "that after about eight months she returned to Harrington and that Hall followed her. They went to live with their mother and they lived there until Mrs. Hall built a home of her own with money that had been left her by her father.

"We will show that even at that time a strange feeling existed between the couple. We will show that even in Brunswick, Hall had indulged in undue familiarities in his dealings with women of his congregation and that there were frequent marital disturbances over that fact.

WENT TO HOSPITAL.

"In 1914 Hall made a trip to Florida, and on returning, instead of going to his home, went to the St. Martin Hospital. When Mrs. Hall, borrowing money from her mother to go to her husband's bedside, arrived there she was told that he had to undergo an operation for appendicitis. Mrs. Hall did not keep the appointment to take up nursing, and she found out that what troubled him to the hospital was not appendicitis, but a so-called social disease from which he was suffering.

"When Hall returned home there were serious discussions occurring between Hall and his wife because of his physical condition. A short time after that Mrs. Hall was obliged to go to Boston to undergo an operation for cancer of the breast. She returned to her mother's home and was cared for there, unable even to comb her hair or to dress herself.

"We will show, gentlemen of the jury, that Mrs. Hall was compelled to return to her home and that Hall in that condition and before she was able to dress herself she contracted the same loathsome disease from which the minister was suffering, and that he said, 'You're no better than I am. You might as well have it as for me to have it.'

MARITAL DIFFERENCES.

Continued marital differences were referred to by the State's attorney, who then traced the life of the Halls to Princeton, where the minister remained until 1912. "To Princeton there were disturbed marital relations because of a young lady that Hall was accused of calling upon.

"Following this episode, the attorney said Mrs. Hall was the first witness to be called by the State. He testified that he took the measurements and made the map of the bridge. The depths of the water, the distance that it was from the bridge, were points in his testimony. He pointed out on the map rocks in the channel beneath the bridge.

Cross examined by George L. Emery, counsel for Hall, Clark admitted that there are high rocks in the channel beneath the bridge, that the high tide is here now, that they have been there since time immemorial and that these were there last June. The logs, he said, had broken and jagged ends. He said that these logs did not show in his map.

Ernest S. Matthews, a track walker for the Boston & Maine railroad, testified to his familiarity with the track.

He said that beneath the bridge was somewhat of an island. That there was a chute of coal and a pocket of iron. He said that he had noticed them last June and that they were there "always."

Q.—On Tuesday, June 11, did you go to North Berwick? A.—I did, at the time above 4 o'clock and started for home at about 6.45.

HALL SAID WIFE FELL OFF.

Witness stated that on the trip over he saw no one, but that on the trip back he met Hall, who came up over the embankment over the bridge. Witness said that Hall said that his wife had stopped to look at the fish and that she fell off and he thought she was dead.

Witness indicated to the man the spot where he thought the body lay.

Q.—Was the point indicated by Mr. Hall with or off? A.—Off.

Q.—How deep was the east channel? A.—About ten inches.

Q.—How deep was the west channel? A.—About ten inches.

Q.—Where did you find Mrs. Hall? A.—Lying face downward in the westerly abutment. Her clothing was torn, and her hair was out.

Q.—What did you do then? A.—I felt of her pulse and found that there was life in the wrist. I felt of her heart and put my head over her over onto the grass. I had the lower part of her body, and he carried the upper part. He let his part of the body fall face down. He asked me to go for a physician.

Q.—Did you come back with the doctor? A.—I did. He mixed up some medicine and gave it to her in a glass.

Q.—Where did he find the glass? A.—It was standing on the abutment, half full of strawberries.

Q.—Was anything else there? A.—Woman's hair comb. The doctor also found a hair comb and with water and she was taken to her residence in a motor car.

Q.—What was the appearance of Mr. Hall then? A.—He was crying some.

Q.—Do you know Katie Gerow? A.—I have known her from five to seven years.

Q.—Did you ever see her with Henry Hall? A.—One day on the railroad track near Bold Hill, before the death of Mrs. Hall. I also saw them one Sunday, walking down the track.

Frank W. Clark, an engineer of Lewiston, was the first witness to be called by the State. He testified that he took the measurements and made the map of the bridge. ACTRESS TRIED ON CHARGE OF BLACKMAIL

Betty Brewster, Accused by Millionaire, Said to Have Taken $215 in Marked Bills

New York, Jan. 29.—Mrs. Betty Inch, known on the vaudeville stage as Betty Brewster, is on trial before Supreme Court Justice Bartow S. Weeks, charged with attempted extortion. Eugene P. Herman, millionaire president of the Herman Motor Truck Company, is the complainant.

Mrs. Inch was arrested in the Woodward Hotel June 13, after, it is alleged, she had accepted $215 in marked bills from Mr. Herman.

Mr. Herman testified that on the evening of June 12, when he and Mrs. Herman and their three children were in the apartment the telephone rang. A woman's voice asked for Mrs. Herman and said:

"How would you like to get evidence for a divorce?"

MARKED HUSH MONEY.

Mrs. Herman beckoned her husband to the telephone and he listened to the conversation. The speaker said:

"I am May Hayes. Last March while you were in Atlantic City your friend and a friend met me and a friend and took up to your apartment, where we spent the night."

Mr. Hermann notified the police. The next day he received a telephone message from a woman at his place of business inquiring as to how he liked the telephone call of the night previous. He made arrangements to meet the woman at the Hotel Woodward that afternoon. He testified that it was Mrs. Inch who appeared and said she represented Max Hayes, who wanted to be reimbursed for the money advanced Miss Hayes, and to handed her the $215 in marked money. Detectives corroborated his story.

DENIES PHONE CALL.

Mrs. Inch is tall, attractive, has deep set blue eyes and a wealth of chestnut brown hair. She was becomingly attired in a small tailored, fur coat and blue serge dress. She admitted receiving the money from Mr. Herman, but explained it was for a May Hayes to meet hospital bills. She denied she had telephoned Mr. Herman or knew.

Questioned by Assistant District Attorney Bohan, she admitted having bargained for $2,000 with a millionaire last February to expose his prospective son-in-law.

Her examination will be continued this morning.

FLIGHT ACROSS ATLANTIC IN AUGUST

British Admiralty Aeronauts to Attempt Trip to Brazil in Super-Zeppelin

By ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE.
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

London, Jan. 29.—The British Admiralty alone has all the facts concerning the super-Zeppelin it is planned to have make the first transatlantic trip from England to Brazil in August, the time coming Summer. And the Admiralty will not divulge these facts.

When London read yesterday of Sir Woodman Burridge's statement that he had secured a cabin in the aircraft for the passage of himself and wife on this maiden trip to Brazil in August Londoners chuckled and called it "jolly spoof."

But I have learned enough today to say that when Sir Woodman's statement was a little premature as to booking passage. It is unquestionably true that by August a lighter-than-air ship will be ready to make the transatlantic flight, establishing a regular air passage first to Argentine and Brazil and then to the United States.

Vickers, Limited, makers of munitions and aeroplanes, are the interested parties in the proposed super-Zeppelin.

FIND WINTHROP MAN'S BODY IN SLUICEWAY

Police Investigate Mysterious Death of Angus T. MacDonald

Pending the outcome of an autopsy, the Winthrop police today made a searching investigation into the circumstances surrounding the death of Angus T. MacDonald of No. 100 Marshall street Winthrop, whose body was found face downward in the mud at the bottom of a sluiceway in Ingleside park Winthrop.

The dead man's coat and overcoat were found lying in the park a few feet from where the body was found by Hugh Trainor, superintendent of parks of Winthrop.

WELL KNOWN IN WINTHROP.

It is believed MacDonald may have died following a fight with some other person, and Associate Medical Examiner Waters is to perform an autopsy on the body today to ascertain the cause of death.

MacDonald was well known in Winthrop, and his tragic ending is a source of much comment in the town. He lived with an aunt, Mrs. Sarah Holland, and the last time she saw him alive was last Saturday noon, although the police say he was seen crossing through the park toward his home on Monday night.

WAS 28 YEARS OLD.

Judging from the position in which the body was found MacDonald had attempted to crawl out of the sluiceway, but failed, and died in a kneeling posture, with his face partly submerged in the mud.

As far as it is known the dead man had no enemies, but the police are trying to make certain that he was not the victim of foul play.

The sluiceway is used to drain off the water in Ingleside Park and scores of high school pupils on their way to and from school passed within a few feet of the body. The dead man was the youngest of five children in Waltham, but went to Winthrop to live with his aunt about eighteen years ago.

SPECIAL NOTICE

BELL-ANS FOR INDIGESTION

Says German Nation Looks Forward to Kaiser's Return

London, Jan. 29.—One influential Berlin newspaper at least is "true blue" to Wilhelm Hohenzollern. It is Count Ernst Reventlow's Deutsche Tages Zeitung which, writing on the occasion of the ex-Kaiser's birthday, says, according to the Berlin correspondent of the Evening News:

"We confront the present government with unshakeable belief in Kaiserism and the empire. We hold firm to the Emperor and will do everything in our power to prevent his surrender to the implacable enemy. We look forward to the day when the Kaiser will be restored."

The German people's party sent birthday greetings to Count Hohenzollern, saying:

"Millions of Germans reverence the monarchistic idea and will resist every unworthy estrangement from the high ideal of German Kaiserdom and Prussian Kingship."

GERMANS GREET U. S. TROOPS AS SAVIORS

Army of Occupation Received With Joy, Says Returned K. of C. Secretary

New York, Jan. 29.—Declaring that the American Army of Occupation was received by the German with "open arms," and they looked upon the American doughboys as their saviors, James E. Lenhart, sales manager of the Gorton Pew Fisheries Company of Gloucester, where he resides at No. 55 Gloucester avenue, returned here today on a French steamship from Bordeaux. He was a Knights of Columbus worker with Pershing's army.

Mr. Lenhart went overseas in October, landing at Bordeaux. Later he joined the second division made up of the Fifth and Sixth Marines and the Twenty-third Infantry, which regiments had borne the brunt of the famous Chateau-Thierry battle, where they repulsed the German armies in the drive on Paris last July.

BEAR BRUNT OF FIGHTING.

"I joined the second division at Les Illsates, and then went with them in the drive," declared Mr. Lenhart.

"They were the most shot-up bunch of men in the whole United States army overseas. Every man had been decorated for gallantry continuously since his arrival in France, and these four regiments, the two of marines, Fifth and Sixth, and the Second and Twenty-Third Infantry (regulars), had been filled and refilled more times than any other units in France.

HIT BY SHRAPNEL.

"On November 4 I was at Grand Pre, when several Boche aeroplanes raided that place and dropped a number of bombs into that village.

"I was not quick enough to get away from one of the falling bombs and was hit by a piece of shrapnel. I was not seriously hurt, however, and within two days I was able to be about again with the division.

"The day the armistice was signed I was in Metz. Women went with joy and the men who remained at home, their being either wounded or too old for service, and even those like children. The children, too, made merry, declaring that for the first time in their lives they would now be able to play without fear of being killed from a stray bullet or from the bomb of a German raider.

"The people of Luxemburg greeted our troops with cheers, and American flags (I don't know where they got them from) waved everywhere.

GUARD LETTERS IN CROMWELL TWINS' DEATH

Mystery of Double Suicide at Sea Intensified by Attitude of Red Cross Workers

New York, Jan. 29.—What was the "personal matter" referred to in a letter left behind by the Cromwell twins, Gladys and Dorothea, Red Cross workers, who leaped to their death from the rail of La Lorraine en route from Bordeau to New York? In the answer to this question is believed to hang the motive for their act.

The letter in question was addressed to Major James F. Sherman of Chicago, head of the eighty women Red Cross workers returning on La Touraine. With three other letters, it was left on a berth in the sisters' stateroom. The others were addressed to Seymour Cromwell, a brother; to Mrs. Seymour Cromwell, and a woman friend. Major Sherman and relatives of the dead girls are carefully guarding the contents of the letters from becoming public.

MAJOR SHERMAN RETICENT.

Asked to disclose the contents of his letter, Major Sherman replied:

"If I told you that I should have to mention a personal matter."

He was asked about a report that he had been requested to watch the girls carefully, and that he had asked the ship's surgeon to visit them the evening before their death. In reply he would only say:

"I cannot answer that question. I have a reason for not answering. I first met the Misses Cromwell in Paris when they were sealing their baggage."

How the two girls jumped into the muddy waters of the Gironde River was described by an American soldier who was doing sentry duty on deck at the time. It was about 7 p. m., the steamship having sailed in the morning. The sisters had given a party in their stateroom the night before.

The soldier noticed the two, pacing the deck arm in arm, while most of the other passengers were at dinner. Suddenly one of them disengaged herself, gently pushed her sister aside, and climbed over the rail. She had scarcely leaped before her twin followed. The sentry gave the alarm.

RAPIDLY LEFT BEHIND.

Two Y. M. C. A. workers, E. O. Brown and F. H. Noe, ran to the rail and report, that one of the sisters deliberately ducked under the water when she came to the surface. Sounds that seemed to them like the cries of someone in distress flated over the water, as the two girls were rapidly left behind by the steamer.

According to report, it was fifteen to eighteen minutes before the ship slowed down and began a search for the bodies, and even then no lifeboats were lowered.

refused to discuss the matter until Captain Causain had made his report to the French consul general here.

According to fellow travelers of the two sisters they had been deeply despondent, and felt that their work in France had not been appreciated.

EMPLOYES IN DANGER AT SALVAGE PLANT FIRE

The lives of dozens of employes were endangered in fire, originating about 4 o'clock this morning in a big scrap heap in the rear of the plant of the Boston Dismantling & Sanitary Company, No. 200 Southampton street.

Two alarms were sounded, and an hour's work on the part of the combined South Boston and Hyde Park companies was necessary to fight the blaze which spread to nearby pulpits and refuse buildings before the building a furnace. The damage was estimated at $7,000.

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS ADD $9,000,000 BURDEN TO PEOPLE

there is uncovered a shrewd plan of the general telephone interests.

Increased rates and increased revenues give the companies enormous advantage, whether their properties are sold to the government or returned to the owners.

If they are sold to the government the price to Uncle Sam may be boosted in proportion to the increased revenues.

If they are returned to the owners the revenue situation is adjusted, from the corporation standpoint, without the vexatious resort to State commissions.

In other words, the telephone people have been thoughtfully plowing with Uncle Sam's oxen, to use an old farming term, according to a local telephone expert.

LIGHTING COSTS SOARING.

The increase in the cost of gas, electric lighting, telephones and elevated fares are part of the answer to the perpetual question:

"Where is my money going so fast?"

It began about the end of the 1917 legislative session, when the Elevated came near putting over a 6-cent fare. At that time citizens of Boston and surrounding towns who had occasion to use the system daily were awestricken at the magnitude of the sum for a short street car ride.

They little felt that they would be paying 8 cents for the same ride within twelve months and be forced to stand not one raise, but two.

But the thing come to pass, and now Bostonians are paying an additional $24 per year to their street car bill.

This tabulation is based upon the average man who rides back and forth to and from work 300 working days in a year. The increased revenue is much greater because the average man uses the Elevated a great many more times during a year, in addition to a ride back and forth to work each day.

ELECTRIC COMPANIES PROTECTED

The next item that assumes staggering proportions is the electric light.

Users of that very necessary commodity have been astounded at the increased cost of their bills. Many of them did not know the company was granted the privilege of increasing their rates 10 per cent. per kilowat hour, and in addition to that were awarded the famous "Coal Clause." It is not quite as difficult to solve as some of the present day conundrums, such as "How Old is Ann," etc., but it serves the purpose just the same and you have it constantly before you by way of reminder on your monthly bill. It reads as follows:

"Whenever during any month in which electricity is furnished under this schedule the cost at the station of a sufficient amount of coal used by the company to do the work of a long ton of coal under the conditions prevailing during 1916, and according to the provisions of the contracts then in force, applying the specifications therein to all kinds of coal, exceeds the cost of such a long ton at its station as during the year 1916, then for each and every cent of such excess cost a charge will be made in addition to the prices named in this schedule of 1½ cents per 1,000 kilowat hours for all kilowat hours measured or estimated and sold under this schedule."

20 PER CENT. GAS INCREASE.

For this you have Something added to your bill. It is money, real money, and is an increased cost, and you must pay it along with the remainder of corporate increases.

The gas company increase was somewhat better disguised. It started early and like the man at the party it stayed late. It commenced in January, 1918, with an increase of 10 per cent., and after working along this schedule, it came back in November for more and received another raise of 10 per cent. The consumer today is paying 20 per cent., or one dollar more in five for his gas.

A Quincy man who was interviewed on the subject said:

"Boston ought not to kick. You pay a dollar for 1,000 cubic feet in the city, while we pay $1.40 for the same gas. It is supplied from Boston, as are many surrounding towns, and they all pay more outside."

However this may be, the Boston citizen is face to face with the fact that he is paying 20 per cent. more this year than last year for gas.

The steam railroads also increased the rates generally about one cent a mile.

The traveling public, not commuters, had to stand the burden of this tax.

The commuters fared somewhat better, although they had to face an increase along with the rest.

A citizen of Greater Boston residing about ten miles out will be forced to pay a cent more per ride each day, making a total increase to him of about two cents per day, or averaging 16 per year.

TELEPHONE COST INCREASES.

Now comes the last item, but not the least, the new telephone schedule, over which there is so much speculation and because of which the average citizen will be forced to pay, so an expert stated, an increase of at least 20 per cent. a year.

The average user of the telephone, one who uses the party telephone averaging about $20 a year, will find his bill increased about 33 per cent., making a total of $40 for the same period.

In discussing the situation today, an expert telephone official in Boston stated that the new rates were about as fine a thing as had ever been put over on the public. "There will be, according to him, an increase of at least 20 per cent. This official said the original work was done in Washington in this manner and for the following reasons:

The various companies throughout the country are desirous of either selling out to the government at an increased figure, or of having their property returned to them with plenty of revenue and facilities with which to get revenue without having to resort to the various State bodies or public service commissions for privileges for some years to come.

Thus with one swoop the telephone companies throughout the country have decreased their zones and have correspondingly increased their rates, and these rates will obtain in case the companies revert to their original owners.

In the event that they do not, the increased revenue accruing from the recently advanced rates will increase the valuation of the stock to such a degree that the government will have to pay a much higher figure for the stock than it would be forced to pay under the old conditions.

It is easily seen that under former conditions the various companies operating in the United States would have to contend with all kinds of opposition in trying to enforce any such schedule as has been placed in the Burleson schedule.

There could be no such wholesale extension of rates and privileges for all companies, it is said, because of the various public service commissions and other State bodies.

A restraining order was given by the Massachusetts Public Service Commission in regard to the new rates, but the company officials decline to have anything to do with it, as it comes, they say, from Washington headquarters.

There was a hearing scheduled for yesterday in the Supreme Court, but it has been postponed until tomorrow. In the meantime the commission will have a hearing on the matter tomorrow.

Householders Hit Hard by Increased Rates

Here's the increase the average Metropolitan Boston householder has been forced to meet recently in his light, gas, telephone and transportation charges:

1919	Per Cent.	Ave. Yearly Bill	1919	Extra Cost
Electric Light	15	$42.00	$48.30	$ 6.30
Gas	20	24.00	28.80	4.80
Elevated	60	30.00	54.00	24.00
Railroad	9	72.00	78.00	6.00
Telephone	33 1-3	30.00	40.00	10.00

Here's what the four big public utility corporations selling light, gas, telephone and transportation charges will make approximately in increased revenue in the coming year:

Elevated	$4,699,472
Gas	1,123,333
Telephone	1,950,000
Electric Light	1,443,540
Total	$9,216,345

Tufts Man Demands Pacifism Charge Be Explained

By International News Service.

New York, Jan. 29.—Clarence R. Skinner, professor at Tufts College, has written to the Senate committee investigating German propaganda asking for an explanation of a charge of pacifism brought against him before the committee. Professor Skinner declares he urged the overthrow of the German imperial regime.

"Why were we chosen among thousands of others who thought as we did?" the professor asks. "To be perfectly frank, is it not your purpose and desire to intimidate freedom of thought and to prevent the coming of fundamental democracy? Are you not afraid that the people on this list may have influence in the period of reconstruction and that they might help to make such methods as this of yours impossible? Are you not afraid that they might help to destroy militarism and establish economic liberty and religious idealism."

BOY'S ILLNESS REUNITES PARENTS

Brockton, Jan. 29.—Armand J. Morin of Marlboro is today reunited with his wife, Maud Morin of No. 95 Winter street, this city, as result of the illness of their eleven-year-old son, Armand J., Jr.

The Morins were divorced eight years ago. Cupid, in partnership with Armand, Jr., brought the romance to a speedy climax and they were remarried a few days ago by City Clerk Barrett, after Judge Reed waived the five days' period and gave the necessary permission.

A few weeks ago the lad was taken seriously ill and in the effort to soothe him Mrs. Morin read extracts from a letter she had recently received from Miss Alice Callahan, the bridesmaid at the original marriage. The boy asked to see his father when the name was mentioned, and Mrs. Morin asked Miss Callahan to inform the boy's father of his illness.

Instead of writing, Mr. Morin came in person.

During the eight years of separation Mr. Morin has been employed as a foreman of convict labor at Springfield, while Mrs. Morin as a skiver in a local shoe factory has supported herself and the child.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

42c the pound

A good, fragrant, rich cup of coffee can only come from choice, selected, plump, ripe coffee beans

The coffee bean is like fruit—to get the flavor it must be cultivated and cared for.

W. S. Quinby Company's La Touraine is called "The Perfect Coffee" because the beans come from plantations that are celebrated for growing the finest coffee beans in the world.

When these beans reach the W. S. Quinby Company plant they are first put through a separator that throws out all but the perfect ones. The large, fully matured beans of several plantations are then mixed, making the famous La Touraine blend.

After the beans are thoroughly cleaned in a "miller" they are roasted by experts who know how to roast them "to a turn."

Then, these perfect beans are screened to eliminate any broken in roasting, after which they are automatically weighed and packed in the La Touraine bag.

The human hand does not touch La Touraine, the Perfect Coffee, until it comes to you.

Try La Touraine, the Perfect Coffee. Its quality comes from perfect beans, perfectly blended and roasted. Ask your grocer for a pound or two. ROMANCE ENDS IN DIVORCE CHARGES

Mrs. Rosborough Says Husband Was Cruel and Failed to Furnish Support

Seven years ago Mary Celestine Maudult, a charming young miss of the Back Bay, sat on the beach sands at Marblehead contemplating the wild waves and their murmurings. Into the scenario came Robert Rosborough, an attractive lad of nineteen, with a wealth of confidence in himself.

He looked at the miss and smiled. She smiled back. They chatted as they tossed sand back and forth, and a friendship sprung up which in a day or two ripened into real love. A year later Robert Rosborough and Mary Maudult slipped quietly off, on Aug. 12, 1912, to be exact, and were married.

Today Mrs. Rosborough, a charming miss yet, with but twenty-seven years to her credit, is anxiously awaiting a verdict from Judge Walter Perley Hall, who heard her petition for divorce. She charged Robert with cruel treatment and failure to provide for her.

In the hearing it developed that Rosborough as a high diver on the Vaudeville circuits had earned as high as $125 a week. Yet she said he hadn't provided for her. They lived together a year and then separated. He went overseas in 1915 as a member of the Canadian Mounted Rifles.

He returned in 1917 and for a time they lived in the same house, but not together.

LACK TOURIST CARS TO CARRY TROOPS WEST

Transfer of Men at Devens Is Consequently Delayed

By THOMAS F. PHELAN.

Camp Devens, Ayer, Jan. 29.—Colonel George L. Byroade today declared that there was a shortage of tourist cars, which resulted in the delay of several thousand men being transferred to Western points.

Captain Clark, transportation officer of the Quartermaster Corps, is authority for the statement that there are plenty of cars available and has been since demobilization was ordered.

It is known here, however, that men assigned to Western camps to be discharged have had cars being held here on account of lack of tourist cars.

Private Samuel Prince of M Company, 22nd Engineers, whose home is in Highland street, Revere, was among the overseas men to arrive here today. He took part in the fights in Argonne Forest and Belleau Wood. He was formerly employed in the circulation department of the American.

Council No. 72, K. of C., Lowell, will stage a show for the benefit of overseas wounded men here Sunday afternoon and evening. The affair will be conducted by William Sullivan. The cast will be composed of eighty persons.

A new auto 'bus line for the benefit of soldiers will be run in the camp shortly.

Through efforts of Chaplain Connolly of the 75d infantry, a new Knights of Columbus building will be opened shortly in the Depot Brigade.

Vest Pocket Beer Supply Made In Pellet Form

Milwaukee, Wis., Jan. 29.—Here's a thought that will be an oasis in the thirsty desert scheduled for July 1.

The "vest pocket schooner" is the great and glorious idea which the Milwaukee breweries are said to have invented. It comes in cubes, like powdered bouillon.

All you have to do is to drop a cube into your mouth, let cold water trickle over the cube and down your throat and you have a drink of beer. All that is lacking is foam.

How many cubes it will take to equal a schooner is not specified, but that's a small matter.

SOLVE DEATH MYSTERY OF PALISADES

Wife of Major Who Died in France Ended Life Through Grief

New York, Jan. 29.—A love tragedy of the war was written into the records of Bergen County, N. J., when the body of the richly-gowned woman found on the rocky edge of the Palisades was identified as the widow of a major of the United States army who had died in France.

The woman was formerly Miss Annie Packwood, aged thirty-four, of Tampa, Fla., daughter of a wealthy retired merchant of that city, according to an announcement made by the Bergen County authorities. They are satisfied that she committed suicide. Identification was made by Mrs. Bradford Ellsworth, a close personal friend.

The name of the husband of the dead woman was not made public. It is said her marriage which occurred just before her husband sailed for France, was concealed from her father and friends.

The dead woman had been despondent since being notified by the War Department last October of the death of her husband in France, according to her friends. She threatened to commit suicide in such a manner that her identity would never be established, they say.

County Physician Ogden announced that the woman had been asphyxiated by the fumes of ether or chloroform.

TO FORCE MILL MEN TO MEET DEMANDS

Textile Strike Threatens Country Unless 54-Hours-Pay Plan Is Granted

One million men, women and children, representing the organized forces of textile workers of the United States and Canada, will back to the limit the demand of New England mill operatives for a forty-eight-hour week, according to a declaration made by John Golden, president of the United Textile Workers of America, today.

Important developments in the international labor upheaval which threatens to involve every unionized textile plant in this country and Canada are the following:

Charges by mill operatives in Lawrence that the agents of the American Woolen Company, which employs nearly half of the textile workers in that city, were attempting to split labor forces by treating with the workers independently.

The inception of the wage issue, in addition to the forty-eight-hour demand, by Italian workers in Lawrence.

A call upon the textile manufacturers of New York State by Governor Smith, to confer at the Albany capitol with union representatives in an endeavor to avert the threatened strike.

Calls for mass meetings in practically every large mill city in New England to solidify the workers for the approaching struggle.

Announcement by union leaders that many large mill owners are secretly acceding from the manufacturers' organization and are preparing to grant the nation-wide demand for a forty-eight-hour week.

In Lawrence a mass meeting of several hundred Italian workers resolved itself into a protest against alleged lack of representation in the general committee of the operatives.

Angelo Di Pierro, a leader of the Italian colony in Lawrence, presided at the meeting which stormily endorsed demands for speakers for a forty-eight hour week with fifty-four hours pay. Edoardo Salerno, "Orator" of the Sons of Italy, urged the justice of the "shorter week—full pay" program. Discovery that a large percentage of those present were not textile workers led to the adjournment of the gathering.

Lawrence today faces the biggest strike in its history.

Mill agents in Lawrence have flatly refused to have dealings with the general committee of the textile workers.

Following the delivery of their ultimatum to the mill owners, the workers' committee is "standing pat" on its demands.

The latest request of the Lawrence workers apparently is not in accord with the promised nation-wide support by the officials of the United Textile Workers of America, it was stated today. Unless their ultimatum is answered by Friday night, they declare nothing will avert a strike.

John Golden, president of the United Textile Workers of America, who is conferring with Governor Beeckman in Providence and Pawtucket, told the Boston American over the phone a million workers were ready to support the demand for a forty-eight hour week throughout the nation.

MANY MANUFACTURERS AGREE.

"The ice is already broken," he asserted. "A number of manufacturers have already met the union demands and we look to see many others follow before next Monday.

"In every mill that does not get on the band wagon before February 1 we will force a forty-eight-hour week. We will work forty-eight hours every day, with a few minutes overtime to permit closing on Saturday at noon. If they want trouble we are ready for it. We will meet any demands."

Mass meetings at the Elks' Auditorium in Providence and the union headquarters at Pawtucket were addressed by President Golden, Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor; Sarah A. Conboy, secretary of the International Textile Workers; John Manning of the United Labor Legislature at Washington; Frank McCarthy, a Boston organizer of the Textile Workers' Union, and Thomas F. McMahon, vice president of the United Textile Workers of America.

The reply of the larger part of the manufacturers throughout the country to the demands of the textile workers will be made known at a secret meeting of the executive board of the International Textile Workers of the United States and Canada to be held Friday evening.

Pastor Warns Against Listening to Labor Agitators at Manchester

Manchester, N. H., Jan. 29.—The Rev. John J. Lyons, pastor of St. Ann's Church, gave out the following statement in regard to labor troubles here:

"I have no quarrel with the labor leaders. However, I want to warn them against agitating here. There is a certain element who have come here from countries where wages are low, who never received the wages they are receiving here, and who are not of sufficient understanding or in a position to judge of conditions here or guide others by their advice. These never agitators want little work and big pay. Our people should not permit themselves to be influenced by such elements."

Eighty-five per cent. of the employes of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company, which number over 18,000, have been organized, according to T. J. Reagan, organizer of the International Textile Workers of America.

Reagan claims that more than 15,000 operatives have joined various textile unions in this city within the last ten days and the present mill situation

They represent the Distillers' Association of America.

U. S. TROOPS IN RUSSIA FOR DEFENCE

Washington, Jan. 29.—The American policy with reference to the presence of United States troops in Russia is that they shall be employed here for purely defensive purposes. That this is President Wilson's determination is known to army officers here.

In conformity with this policy the United States troops at and near Archangel are to remain strictly on the defensive and to guard the vast quantity of munitions and other supplies there to prevent them from falling into the hands of the Reds.

If they have not already been won over, it is confidently believed that the British and French will soon adopt the same attitude with reference to Russia, with the hope that order may be restored and representation at the peace conference from all factions be brought about.

Brigadier-General Cole Writes That Division Has Orders to Come Home

The date of the departure of the Twenty-sixth Division from France is expected to be known within a few days. Two units of the Yankee Division are reported to be on their way to ports of embarkation, where they will board transports for home. Other units of the division are expected to be ordered to the coast momentarily and to a man the men of the famous New England division are overjoyed at the prospect of an early return to this country.

In a letter to his wife, Brigadier-General Charles H. Cole of the Twenty-sixth Division, writing under date of January 8, he said:

"I received notice tonight for a conference of brigade commanders to discuss plans for our early return to the United States, for which order has been issued from Washington. This does not mean as much speed as it looks for I believe it will take six or seven weeks to get home.

"I have been sick to my brigade since December 1, 1918."

The latest figures (formerly the old Plebe Corps Cadets) are reported to be killed in action. Brest is only a short distance from the French embarkation port most favored by the American forces. The next unit of the Twenty-sixth Division to receive orders to move was the 51st Machine Gun Battalion, which, according to recent reports from overseas, quartered in the same town.

Until after unit of the division is being released from active service and started toward the coast of France and it is believed the entire division will be ready to sail for home the latter part of February.

QUIT MEAT WHEN KIDNEYS BOTHER

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder troubles you.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts, from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; make a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone likes. Meat should be shunned and the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.—Advertisement.

DROP ON A CORN! LIFT CORNS OUT WITH FINGERS

Hurt? No, not one bit! Just drop a little Freezone on that touchy corn, instantly it stops aching then you lift that bothersome corn right off. Yes magic! Costs only a few cents.

Why wait? Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of Freezone for a few cents, enough to rid your feet of every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and calluses, without soreness or irritation. Freezone is the much talked of discovery of the Cincinnati genius.—Advertisement.

Clear, Peachy Skin Awaits Anyone Who Drinks Hot Water

Says an inside bath, before breakfast helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Sparkling and vivacious—merry, bright, alert—a good, clear skin and a natural, rosy, healthy complexion are assured only by pure blood. If only every man and woman could be induced to adopt the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change and take place. Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls, with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "run-downs," "brain fogs" and pessimists, we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking each morning, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, before putting more food into the stomach.

Those who have a sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatic colds, and particularly those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in one's health and appearance, awaiting those who practice internal sanitation.—Advertisement.

The Newlyweds and the Want Ad.

THEY got married.

Perhaps it was not the sensible and prudent thing to do, but if all young people were prudent and sensible there would be a great falling off in the number of marriages.

George was not drawing a big salary, and Jenny was only twenty and had given no striking indication of a disposition towards settling down.

But they got married. Because they loved each other and life was simply unbearable apart.

It was also a great relief to their friends, for they had gotten to the point where George could talk only of Jenny and Jenny's sole topic of conversation was George.

And they were very happy.

Possibly their happiest experience was in furnishing their little flat.

At first they were told that they could not find one at the price they could afford to pay. But they read carefully the Want Ad columns of The Boston Evening American, followed them up, and made a dozen excursions into various parts of the city, and finally found one which they transformed into a Paradise. "It was the most comfortable little home any mortals ever had," said Jenny, "and if it had not been for the Want Ads in The Boston Evening American we never would have discovered it.

"It's on a little street up close to where Millie lives. The owner has just finished it. It is brand-new, and everything is spick and span.

"And we found The American Want Ads a great help, too, in furnishing the apartment.

"I found a perfectly lovely dining-room table, with plate glass on the top, and chairs to match, and a sideboard and rug and everything, at a sale that was advertised in The American, where a family was going to move to Washington, because the husband was in Government business, and they wanted to get rid of their furniture. The things were almost new, and we bought them for nearly nothing.

"And we had the most fun going to an auction sale where we bought one of those high electric lamps for the front room, with shade and all. We got it for $3.50, and I know it must have cost $20.00 originally.

"To tell the truth, we got most of our furnishings at places we saw advertised in American Want Ads.

"They're so convenient, wonderful labor-savers.

"We would sit down and look over the Want Ad column and mark those that we thought we could use. Then we cut them out and pasted them on a slip. It saved no end of time and trouble, besides a lot of money.

"We have not paid for everything yet, but we are laying by something every week, and we will be all clear before long.

"I used to think that Want Ads were only for people who bought and sold old bottles and worn-out clothes and things like that. But I have found out they are mighty practical for anybody.

"At least, they were for us."

SCHOOL CADETS FIGHT NEW UNIFORM

An order requiring Boston High School boys to outfit themselves with new khaki uniforms in place of the time-honored "blues and whites" worn by high school cadets since Civil War days, resulted in the protests of many high school cadets. A number of letters have been received by the American from pupils who declare this new order inflicts on them an unnecessary burden.

"A senior in high school has many expenses and it is really the most costly of the four years," writes one student. "These boys are being educated at a great sacrifice on the part of their parents. With the high cost of civilian clothes, the idea of forcing a boy to buy a practically useless uniform is preposterous and it should not be allowed.

The uniform order originated with the Board of Education, Principal James E. Thomas of the Dorchester High School said, and added that Nathaniel J. Young, director of athletics for the Boston schools, had handling the matter of uniforms.

Headmaster George W. Evans of the Charlestown High School said the American the decision to change the style of uniform was made after a conference between Nathaniel J. Young and the various high school headmasters.

UNIFORMS SELDOM USED.

The objection of the students is that many of them will be obliged to buy uniforms which they will have use for on but two or three occasions. After that they are useless to them, they say.

"A great many pupils in different high schools have already bought the old style uniforms and will now have to buy new ones," one letter reads. "As many are now in the service and they will have a uniform only about three months during the war, would the uniforms have to be used for two drills in competition and in one dress parade.

"It has been suggested that they sell the uniforms upon getting through with them. To whom can they sell them? Everyone attending school will be supplied and it will be the freshmen only who will be on the market to buy. The way the freshmen are now coming into the high schools only about one-quarter would be altogether too large for an avail a person."

Nathaniel J. Young, director of athletics, says the pupils are not being forced to buy the new uniforms.

PURCHASE NOT FORCED.

"There are a lot of seniors buying the uniforms," he said, "and they are not complaining. The students are not being forced to buy the uniforms. There may be a few cases where a student feels that he cannot afford to buy the new uniform and if such a student should refuse to buy it is quite likely that he would still be let go by.

"The new uniform is the same as that adopted by the Secretary of War. It is made of cotton and is very cheap, cheaper than the old uniform when all the ornaments, letters and similar adornment is considered. For huge in a couple of years from now they will be still cheaper."

Michael H. Sullivan, a member of the School Committee, said the seniors were not compelled to buy the uniform in his understanding.

Upon being requested to explain how the uniform could be used after graduation, Mr. Sullivan said that when knocking about in the country he always wore his old khaki outfit and that he believed the uniforms could be used by the boys in the same way.

"It is a khaki service uniform with long trousers, with or without leggings (at present we are not using leggings). The cap is similar to the army service cap with a black visor and black chin strap. The pant leg for officers has a black, broadcloth stripe down the outside.

"I think Boston will be pleased with the new uniform when they see from four to five thousand cadets on the streets parading with it."

Headmaster George W. Evans of the Charlestown High School said that there is no complaint on the part of Charlestown High School boys over the adoption of a new uniform.

"On the contrary," said Mr. Evans, "there is a distinct feeling among the boys of dissatisfaction with the old uniform. It was adopted shortly after the Civil War and corresponds with that period in style. The boys got so that they were sensitive about appearing in public alone dressed in the old style regimentals, consisting of a blue cap and blouse and white duck trousers."

WHY HAIR FALLS OUT

Dandruff causes a feverish irritation of the scalp, the hair roots shrink, loosen and then the hair comes out fast. To stop falling hair at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a small bottle of Danderine at any drug store for a few cents, pour a little in your hand and rub well into the scalp. After several applications all dandruff disappears and the hair stops coming out.—Advertisement.

CHILD'S TONGUE BECOMES COATED IF CONSTIPATED

If cross, bilious, sick, feverish, or full of cold, take no chances.

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm tender stomach, liver, bowels.

Children love this "fruit laxative," and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver and bowels so nicely.

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is, they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sours, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold, has sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhoea. Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system and you have a well, playful child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.—Advertisement.

HARVARD UNIT IS DUE AT PORTLAND

Halifax, N. S., Jan. 29.—The White Star liner Megantic, which arrived here from Liverpool with over 1,000 passengers, among whom were many Americans, left early today for Portland, Me., where the Americans will disembark. She is expected to dock about noon tomorrow.

In addition to her Canadian passengers, she brought the Harvard Surgical Unit, R. E. F., of which Lieut.-Colonel Hugh Cabot of Boston is in command. It is made up of twenty-seven medical officers and 102 nurses. Accompanying the unit is H. White, president of the Harvard University Press, who has acted as business manager of the unit since its organization.

The Harvard Unit, which was organized shortly after the war broke out, has been in charge of the private general hospital No. 22, at Camiers. It has handled in all 128,000 British wounded in hospital and 27,000 in casualty stations. This total hospitalization is per cent of all British wounded during the war.

BOMBED BY GERMANS.

The unit was bombed by German airships on numerous occasions, one of which the complete officers personnel only escaped by having been called out a few minutes before to receive a convoy.

As the big liner pulled into the pier the nurses and medical officers danced to the music of the 9th Canadian band. The famous unit was the only American unit to stick with the British forces after the United States declared war, and in all the big battles it worked side by side with the British nurses. Colonel Hugh Cabot was awarded two decorations, the Royal S. George Cross (first class) and British gift.

MANY OTHERS AWARDED.

Major Chaddock, another member of the unit, was decorated with the Serbian Cross. Captain Edward Hoover, of Boston, was awarded the Military Cross early in 1916. Matron Hogan, has the Royal St. George Cross (first class).

Eight of the nursing sisters also have the St. George decoration. Only one of the Harvard unit was lost during the long stay on the battlefield. A nursing sister died of fever in 1914.

A well-known American on board is Lieutenant Clifford Cowper, U. S. Navy, who is returning from Belgium, where he was sent by his government to supervise the reconstruction of the Louvain University.

A party of twelve Y. M. C. A. people were on board, ten men workers and two women workers.

G. O. P. INFLUENCE ANSWERS 'DRY' NEW YORK TODAY

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 29.—New York will join the dry States today. This was assured when the Republicans, voting 38 to the Democrats 21, rejected the attempt of the latter to postpone for ten days final action on the federal amendment.

Harvard to Award War Degrees to Army Men

Harvard is to give a war degree to students who were prevented from completing their Freshman work because they were in the service. The move was announced by the overseers and sanctioned by the faculty.

The new degrees will be A. B. and S. B. Seniors soon, for honorable service in the war. This will enable those students who enlisted after they had completed three years' work to get their degrees without requiring to college.

Students who enlisted before they had completed three years of study may return and remain in college until they have done the equivalent of twelve courses instead of sixteen, as was previously the requirement for a degree.

FIREMEN AT DEVENS ASK FOR DISCHARGES

Worcester, Jan. 29.—Members of the fire department at Camp Devens are sending protests to the mayor of Boston for being detained while other members who haven't been there are discharged.

Many of the Devens firemen are members of the departments in their home cities and have positions waiting for them. They have been on duty for months, twenty-four hours a day with only three days' leave of absence. Efforts by the chiefs of Boston, Worcester and other cities to get them home have been repeatedly turned down.

PRICE RESTRICTIONS ON FOOD REMOVED

The entire Food Administration machinery that regulates profit on sugar, ham, bacon, oleomargarine and butter substitutes as they have affected wholesale and retail dealers under the regulations of the administration are withdrawn. This action removes all price restrictions in the buying and selling of those foodstuffs.

INDICT O'BRIEN FOR PERJURY IN FISH CASE

William J. O'Brien, president of the Boston Fish Market Corporation, and a member of the big firm of R. O'Brien & Co., has been indicted by the Federal Grand Jury on the charge of perjury, the alleged act having been committed by the defendant while he was giving testimony in the so-called "Fish Trust" case.

O'Brien is charged with testifying that the firm of R. O'Brien & Co., of which he is a member, has no connection with the Boston Fish Pier Company and owned none of its stock, which testimony he is alleged to have known was false. O'Brien testified that his firm sold all its stock of the Boston Fish Pier Company to J. Frank Devlin, the latter being the bookkeeper of O'Brien.

The day following this testimony O'Brien on being cross examined, admitted that his previous testimony was untrue. He stated that the stock in question was owned by his company. Two days following this admission, O'Brien was arrested. When arraigned O'Brien pleaded not guilty to the charge and was held in $2,500.

The Grand Jury returned eighteen other indictments and four secret ones.

Samuel F. McKnight was indicted on the charge of using the mails to defraud. The defendant said that he was not indicted under his proper name which he claims is Herman McKnight. He entered a plea of misnomer and was held in $2,500.

INTEREST STARTS FEBRUARY 1

"You win or lose the minute he first sets eyes on you!"

That was the thought pounding through Keith's brain as he tramped back to civilization—back to face the chief of the Northwest Mounted Police. His uniform, his figure, his face even to the peculiar scar on the forehead.—everything about him was not Keith the fugitive from justice but Conniston, the officer of the Royal Mounted who had died in the shack up there under the Arctic stars.

At last he stood before the chief "whose eyes could see through boiler-plate"—and before the girl supposed to be his sister—and, then, before Shan Tung, the Chinese mystic who had known the dead officer and who never forgot a face.

In "The River's End," in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING for February, James Oliver Curwood has written a tale of such fire, such romance, such vigor and intrigue and charm that you will follow its progress as you have followed few serials.

With Kathleen Norris, Arthur Somers Roche, Ruth Sawyer, Gertrude Brooke Hamilton and I. A. R. Wylie in this same number, you will see very clearly what we mean by the surpassing quality of GOOD HOUSEKEEPING fiction. See which story you like best—to-night!

Petition to the Secretary of War to Send Soldiers Home With Six Months' Pay

Sign this petition, get your friends to sign it, and forward it to the Boston American, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

To the Honorable Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War:

The undersigned respectfully urge you to return to their homes as soon as possible the soldiers who have accomplished so brilliantly every object America had in the war.

We urge, also, that you obtain the necessary authority to pay these men their military wages for six months, or for some sufficient period after their discharge from the army until they can obtain useful and remunerative employment.

We urge this as an act of simple justice by a great nation to its heroes.

(Signed)

WAR VETERANS IN PLEA FOR EXTRA PAY

for six months' pay for the fighting men of the nation.

Every day is adding hundreds of signatures to the petition and more indorsements. Though bearing more than 162,000 names, a record number each mail brings in hundreds more from scattered places all over New England. By its patriotic appeal the petition has gripped men and women everywhere.

Alderman Frank D. Sullivan of Woburn, who introduced the petition in the Board of Aldermen of that city, writes that it was unanimously adopted. After receiving the signature of the Mayor, it was sent to Washington to show how civic sentiment in Massachusetts stands upon the question of a war bonus for the soldiers as first advocated by the Boston American.

The city of Peabody, through its City Council, placed itself on record as favoring the petition. As was the case with every other civic body or society where the petition is brought up, it was unanimously indorsed.

Henry L. Abrahams, widely-known labor leader and secretary of the Boston Hand-in-Hand Society, declares there was not a dissenting voice at the meeting when the proposal to indorse the American's petition was put to a vote. "The vote was unanimous," he declares.

PEABODY SERVICE ASSOCIATION.

The city of Peabody not only takes especial pride in being among the very first cities to have indorsed the war bonus petition, but also claims the great distinction of being the first city to form a Soldiers' and Sailors Association composed of men of these branches of the service who served in the great war.

The meeting for organization was held in K. of C. hall and Dr. J. W. P. Murphy was made temporary chairman. John P. O'Connell of Salem, a representative of the Department of Justice, declared that one of the objects of this association should be to obtain employment for discharged service men. The Soldiers' Service Bureau had already taken up.

A committee to arrange for permanent organization consists of the following veterans: H. P. Duggan, W. H. Osgood, J. H. Quinlan, L. P. Cassidy, B. T. Levin, J. T. Waters, P. J. Sullivan, Arthur Powell, Forrest A. Wilson and John J. Jones.

FINDING WORK FOR MEN.

The Soldiers' Service Bureau is pledged to assist in the formation of associations of veterans of the war and to assist them in every way in working out their plans.

Service men are also learning that the bureau will give them every assurance in finding work; assure medical aid for those in need of medical care and give them free legal and medical advice. All these branches are gathered together at No. 80 Boylston street. Information concerning the location of men and units will be secured at once free of the Boston American, No. 80 Summer street.

Employers are notifying the bureau that positions of former employees who went into the service are being held open for them at the same or higher wages, generally the latter. The latest to give notification that the jobs of war service men are open to them and to make a preference for service men in filling vacancies is the John Hancock Insurance Company, through Secretary John E. Nason, who writes:

"Boston American, Soldiers' Friend:

"This company has guaranteed to all of its employes who have entered war service that upon their return a position would be given them at least equal in compensation to that previously held. Many of our men have already been discharged from the service and have returned to duty with the company, and we not only expect but hope that all of our former employes who have not made the supreme sacrifice will eventually return.

"We have found it possible to fur nish positions to some men discharged from the service not previously employed by us. We believe that men who have served their country should be given every possible opportunity for employment upon leaving the service, and are thoroughly in sympathy with any action in that direction.

"Yours very truly,

"Fred E. Nason, Secretary.

CHARLEY PARKER DELIVERS BIG AND MUSSES UP BUCKLEY

By NICK FLATLEY.

BUSY CHARLEY PARKER is now looking for new worlds to conquer. After giving Johnny Buckley a lesson in boxing at the Armory Club, he is now prepared to shoot at the big lightweights, and you can tell the world he will give the best of them a whole lot of trouble. Buckley was by long odds the best boy Parker has faced. In previous fights said Buckley has appeared to great advantage. He has been clever and a good hitter and everything.

But that didn't worry Parker at all.

Charley sailed in as soon as the bell changed, and opened a barrage of boxing gloves that had Buckley cut off from any chance of getting near the decision. Charley was faster, the cleverer, hit the harder and showed superior generalship all the way. He didn't lose a round and Buckley failed to come near winning one.

In other fights, Buckley has looked like a prospective champion, but never before has he had the battle carried to him so strongly. His left hand, usually a big help, was tied up and his right swings invariably bounced off Parker's elbows.

The quarrel went to show what we have always contended—that good local boys will get the crowds. The house was packed, more so than when Norfolk and Turner fought for a big gathering, and there was great enthusiasm all the way. Importing chaps with big reputations is costly, and not always profitable. The receipts for the Josephine-Snyder bout, and last night's, should certainly stick out as a glittering sample for matchmakers.

Plenty of Action in Prelim Bouts.

THE main bout was full of action, Buckley pegging away despite the beating he was getting, and so, too, were the preliminaries. Tommy Ryan of South Boston and Willie Coogan from the same place staged six torrid rounds to a draw. It was just as this till started that a member of the fairer sex, disguised in masculine habiliments, tried to come in to see the show, but was defeated dismally by the Sherlocks at the portals.

Tommy Marks had the better of Young Paiano in a six-rounder, and the hard-hitting Sam Bell took the semi-final from Joe Flynn. Sam had Joe weaving at the finish, and with another round to go undoubtedly would have scored a K. O.

Next week Battling Ortega will take on Tommy Rouen, who used to make his headquarters hereabouts, but latterly has gone West. The Battling one evidently likes to train on sleeping cars, as he is listed for a scrap in Milwaukee Friday night.

Commercial Lines Up Card Full of Fight.

REAL fighting gets the crowd, which is the answer to the wonderful popularity of the Commercial A. C. They fill their club to the rafters each week, because they—the ring roosters—know there will not be any let up in moments. This week's card—one of those athletic affairs—promises just as well as usual.

It is as follows, leaving you to pick out your favorites yourself:

George Brooks, Lowell, and Freddie Williams, Cambridge, six rounds; Tony Vatlon, Brighton, and Young Viera, New Bedford, ten rounder; Joe Mesquino, East Side, and Young Rocco, Camp Devens, ten rounds; Art Magri, Berlin, and Joe Rivers, Gloucester, ten rounds.

Strona, who gave Parker such a tough battle a week back, was down to meet Melanson, but had to cancel because of sickness. Melanson and Rocco have boxed at the club previously, one of those battles that have the crowd standing on the chairs throughout.

BRUCE DUE TODAY FOR SET-TO WITH KETONEN

Jean Bruce, sensational Southern wrestler, was due in Boston early today from his training quarters at Fay Ridge, N. Y., and will finish what little work he has to do here for his match with Walter Ketonen.

Boston mat fans are keyed up over the set-to, which promises to uncover more scientific wrestling than has been seen in a middleweight match held here in a long time. They are to get the best two out of three falls.

By BERT E. COLLYER.

Runnan, The Spreckles youngster is in a tuff spot today, but my notebook tells me the fellow who has been digesting on those genuine pickless of late, slips me the grad tidings that unless Mecredy makes a lot of mistakes in the actual running of the race, the colt will be on the front end of the procession when they reach the payoff station.

Better still, he says the Californians are down hook, line and sinker. That's good enough for mah.

Hidden Ship most likely will rule favorite and is sure to go well. Forecloser is the real dangerous contender, however, and will take a world of beating. All this happens in the first race at New Orleans.

ASTRAEA IS DANGEROUS.

Astraea is well suited at the route and with clear sailing should win the second event. Cave Man can disgraceful race last time out, but may come to life here and surprise the supposedly wise folk.

Choir Master was beat on an alibi the other day, and a muddle-head ride occurred when the judges placed him second. The same people will have the works in again today, and they are very likely to connect.

Ina Ray has lot of early foot and is sure to be right there all the way. Royal Interest and Arabian are a short end of the purse between them.

Straight from the feed box comes the info, that this is the day for Trinsty. A good boy is to ride and those in the know think it useless to have taken care of the colt if Finchmire is the dangerous one. He's been working like a house afire.

SAILOR IN GOOD SPOT.

Just a question of whether or not the right people bet on Sailor. If they do, then good night. Naff sent Emanale and Newell W. figure next best. Archie Alexander has not run to best form yet. Tuh him closely.

The change in trainers may work considerable improvement in Lottery's running. Was never much better than right now and should bring home the bacon.

Bob Hensley turned up a ton of wise money last time out, but it was a reason for that plunge. Berlin about holds the balance right.

All over but the shouting in the last. Little Cottage is in the money nice. Don't ask any questions, go smack a couple of doggos on this bird's nose. Bumhast and Queen Apple for the balance of the purse.

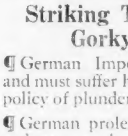
Attacks Victorious Powers and Calls Them "Imperialists"



Says War Has Aroused the Animal in All European Lands and In the Hearts of the Nations.

Striking Thoughts From Gorky's Article:

¶ German Imperialism is vanquished and must suffer heavy punishment for its policy of plunder.

¶ German proletariat, tortured by war and worn out by hunger is compelled to pay dearly to the victors because it submitted to the class policy of its rulers.

¶ The victors, who only a short time ago notified the world that they had caused the annihilation of millions of people for the victory of right and for the happiness of all the world, have now forced the German people to submit to armistice conditions which are ten times harder than the Treaty of Brest, and which threaten Germany with inevitable famine.

The Secret Life and Loves of the Ex-Czarina

By BARONESS ZENEIDE TZANKOFF

Sensational Chapters in the Amazing Career of the Deposed Empress of Russia, as Told by Her Lifelong Friend

Edited by William Le Queux, famous traveler, authority on European court intrigues, adviser to the British secret service foreign department, frequently consulted by European secret service departments on spying and espionage.

She certainly was not a Russian empress, for she did not speak Russian, nothing in the Russian language to the Russian people.

Intrigue and ferocity were the two outstanding features of the life of my imperial mistress. Besides the emperor was wont to boast openly of his "conquests" and his "spooks" and in fashionable Petrograd insatiable readers were customarily held in secret, some of the most renowned "mediums" being accommodated in Tsarskoe Selo or in the palace of the Grand Duke Nicholas (since gone) in the Nevsky street in Petrograd, where seances were held in strictest secrecy.

Czar's Cabinet of "Mediums"

What went on there was really amazing. I can recall a number more than one occasion I have been present at these weird seances. The spirit of Alexander III. was invariably invoked and no one would venture to take any kinds of affairs of State prior to the appointment of ministers and the dismissal of others, supposing reforms of any description were submitted. That the deposed Empire was being governed by a number of individuals who had never been elected never emanated from the Empress before they appeared in the presence of the Czar.

Later, under Rasputin, though she believed in hypnotism, was suspicious of those supposed to be able to communicate with the dead. She told me on more than one occasion that there was certainly some mysterious power of which we remain in ignorance, but which has been practiced since the days of Egypt, and which one cannot do better than refer you to Exodus for practical proof. But the whole question was one to bring the whole subject into ridicule. Hence one can understand how they play an unpleasantly part in Russian politics by imposing some husband through the agency of the "medium."

Many grave crimes were, I shortly practiced in these seances. In more than one case I knew for positive fact that the "spirit" of the late Czar was invoked to give his consent to the murder of some person who had incurred the displeasure of the Empress or Rasputin.

Here is one instance:

Ella wished for the dismissal of old Prince Dolgorouki from the post of Governor-General of Moscow, and to replace him by the Grand Duke Serge Alexandrovitch, who had married her sister, Elizabeth.

Old Prince Dolgorouki, brother of "Nana" Dolgorouki, had filled the post of governor-general of Moscow for the most popular of Governors. Moscow loved him. He was a merciful governor, never unnecessarily severe, and he had the confidence of the people, which was more than could be said for many who had preceded him.

Another Dismissal

Suddenly it was known that he was to make way for the Empress's uncle. The announcement was deeply resented by the people and by the army, and Prince Dolgorouki himself, to whom I went to express my sympathy, was deeply hurt.

I had a long talk with him and I found that his heart was broken.

"After 30 years' faithful service," he pleaded, "through Germany and Russia's crowning day," his dismissal had been ordered by the Empress acting on the instructions of the spirit of Alexander III. He died, literally, broken hearted, in complete retirement, and I have always believed that his dismissal had been secured by the pitiful superstition which was the curse of the Empress Alexandra Feodorovna.

This more or less full of the Czar's uncle was unfortunate. The Empress had never liked Nicholas, and during the early years of her married life she had made it clear that she considered him a nonentity. Nicholas, on his side, was afraid of his wife, and he was completely dominated by her. Nicholas was a weak man, and Alexandra Feodorovna was a woman of strong will and of considerable ability. She had been brought up in the household of Queen Victoria, and she had imbibed the idea of the divine right of kings. She believed that she was destined to rule the world. She did not hesitate to tell me that she considered herself as the equal of any sovereign in Europe, and she did not deny that she had many times told me so.

Meanwhile Nicholas, though he felt was entirely dominated from the diplomatic representatives of the Powers—whom Alexandra Feodorovna, with her intuitive perception, quickly classed under State officials that misguided husband—allowed her entire control over State affairs. Her self-confidence, her faith in her own intuition and wisdom, her belief that she was divinely appointed by her husband's father had never allowed to the Empress Marie, and to never dreamt that she would be called upon to rule. Nicholas, on the other hand, she was in the same time, after the wedding ceremony in Berlin.

Another source of fear aroused the people to fury demonstrations, especially in the direction of Kodinsky Square, on the way to Petrograd, where we were to join the Imperial train for a review. The white-painted Imperial train, like the ordinary traveling stock, was parallel with a passenger train which had been stopped to allow us to pass. I was seated with the Empress in the luxurious traveling saloon, when the Emperor rose and went to the window to bow to the people in the other train. Several bills, while at the same moment a priest, whose name I have forgotten, was found to be Rasputin, stood at the window of the compartment opposite and made the sign of the cross in blessing.

The Czar removed his cap and bowed reverently. Then, turning to his wife, he called her over.

She rose and went to the window, whereupon the priest again made the sign of the cross. But Her Majesty immediately turned her back upon him, and impetuously exclaimed:

Needed Blessing Later

"Why do you worry me, Nikki, about these unbearable peasants? I need require their blessings. You hold your dignity far too cheap!"

The Czar sighed, but made no reply, and his wife returned to her chair.

Czarina's Own Spy

Now we had made it secret in the personal service—though not half a dozen persons in the world knew of them—named Nicholas Wassilieff, who was employed in a private capacity. He was a short, burly-eyed little man of about fifty, with grizzled beard, hair cut en brosse, and somewhat dwarfed of stature and it was his duty to prosecute any inquiries she might think necessary, and to report the results of such her enemies and her friends.

Wassilieff's normal form like her self, he cultivated as a Russian, and was an executive of the Third Section, the Ministry of the Interior, or political police. As an agent he was just as unscrupulous as he was successful, and, well paid for his services as he was, he never turned down dirty and disgraceful work for his personal employer.

At the palace Wassilieff was a representative of a well-known firm of jewelers in Paris, and the reason given for his frequent visits to Russia was that he was canvassing purchasers of jewels, of which the Empress was known to be extremely fond.

I was about the very few persons who knew the following true cause of Wassilieff's frequent visits, and he impressed upon me the necessity of absolute secrecy.

"Don't be sadly wonderful!" she would sometimes declare. "No secret, however well guarded, is safe from me. He must employ dozens of people to watch and make inquiries."

Without doubt he did. He was of course known to all the leaders of the people, who believed that he had been promoted to another department in the police service, but none dreamed that he was the private agent of the Empress herself, or that he was employed to spy upon those very ministers—persons who were established by Imperial decree—whom he watched and reported upon.

Though I was aware of the reality, my friend, Madame Narishkine, the favorite mistress of the moment, refused to believe it. Even when, one month, forced by fresh her dark secrets with a woman so unfashionable and as loyal to Russia, and above all to herself and Imperial personal interests as was the authority of court spies, all the pitiful details of Wassilieff's

CHAPTER XXXI.

He Finds Himself

THAT evening, as nine o'clock, Jim was in the smoking-room, writing. He had resigned Church with an important mission on the object of which his whole future depended.

If you will review his story, as no doubt you have done, you will see that, despite a strong will and a calm outlook to all the freedom of his life, he always was influenced by circumstance.

Circumstance from the first had determined that he should be a Lord.

I leave it to policemen to determine what Circumstance is. I only know that it came from a long association of Mrs. Abercrombie seems to be more than a coincidence. Jim, who had never had any ability, the man destined for the Presidency of the College union, had to give up his office and his after Lent as assistant partner him. He the man who, starting in life with everything against him, had succeeded in creeping, bit by leaps and bounds.

I do not wish to cast a shade on individual effort, I only say that, if you were Bird Circumstance will darken gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. In a half pint of water add 1 ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ ounce glycerine. These ingredients can be procured at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look twenty years younger. This is not a dye, it does not color the most delicate scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off."

Why Be So Fat

YEARS ago the only known formula or method of treatment were starvation, diet and tiresome exercising. Today it is present. Famines, Marmola Prescription Tablets, are used and at bedtime—and fat simply vanishes. People tell their friends of their patents, until thousands know and use this reducing method. Get what they like and will be free from fat. Or if you prefer not write direct to the Marmola Co. 49 Garfield Building, Detroit, Mich.

IF ALL MOTHERS ONLY KNEW!

Thousands of Children Suffer from Worms and Their Mothers Do Not Know What the Trouble Is.

Signs of worms are: Deranged stomach, swollen upper lip, sour stomach, offensive breath, hard and full belly with occasional grindings and aches about the navel, pale face of bluish tint, heavy and dull, twitching eyelids, one of the most telltale of the various signs are crack, scaly skin at the corners of the mouth, little red points sticking out on the tongue, starting during sleep, slow fever.

Mrs. H. S. Roberts, 505 Anderson St., Flint, Mich., used Dr. True's Elixir for her little baby girl when she was sick. Mrs. Roberts wrote us: "Dr. True's Elixir is cured of her worms. And in a later letter wrote: "Baby is fine and I think it was your Dr. True's Elixir that helped me." We have a 6 mos. sister to Dr. True's Elixir at once. Write us every about the case. CHAPTER LXIX.—Continued.

"AMAZING!" said the Judge.

"Nothing but fact," said Reed. "I defy you to prove [illegible]."

"This man," Taylor went on, "for the sake of old friendship makes an appointment with Miss Stone, and offered his hand, though knowing she had received her engagement ring from me that very morning—and he did not stop there—he told her he would have plenty to live on from the share of the bounty from this worthless mine and finally he left her with a promise that if silence on her part would mean success on his.

"But first he thought of the kingdom, the share of the swindle, and he came to me with a mock interest to tell me that this young woman was not the girl she pretended to be."

Taylor paused while the astonished faces of Judge Blake and his wife bore evidence of the interest in his recital.

"Now, Reed," Taylor resumed, "you say these are lies."

The waiting reporters were written into a corner. He surmounted a show of indignation and pointed to the pale-faced girl whose eyes had never left his face.

"She told you all this," he answered. "She deceived you about herself. Why should you believe those stories about me?"

The eyes of all in the room were focused upon Helen as the man put this vital question. Her reply was characteristic of her Western upbringing. Quickly her hand was raised from the pocket of her skirt and in it gleamed the nickel barrel of a small pistol.

With a steady step she advanced until the muzzle almost touched the now terrified head and holding the weapon as steadily that it seemed like a point of light pulled back the trigger.

"Tell the truth," she said in a low voice, all the more impressive for its tenseness, "for when Bill Sherman knows that Mr. Taylor has been like a brother to me he'll kill it for you."

Reed's hands were up, he was crouching back in abject terror.

"He lied," cried the Judge.

I would cough and raise mucous every five minutes and at night I got no peaceful sleep.

Decided to try essence Mentho-Laxene and proud to say in two weeks was entirely well."

Note: The above quotation from a letter written by Mrs. Emma Conway, 50 E. 84th St., New York City, to a prominent physician, is only a brief evidence of the great virtues which anyone will find in using the concentrated essence Mentho-Laxene to abort colds and coughs and to relieve and overcome the chronic effects of neglected colds. Low Steel Dividend Is Expected to Injure Stocks

PROVISIONS AND COTTON MAKE STRONG RALLY

Government's Plan for Roads Causes Asphalt, Oil and Tire Stock Gains

BROADAN WALL.

(Registered U. S. Patent Office.)

New York, Jan. 29.—The irregularity of the stock market was the result of the dividend position of what the United States Steel dividend would be. Action on the common was not announced until after the close, but just before the end of trading there was a decidedly bullish optimistic, so that the final tone of the market was strong.

The rate of 1¼ regular, plus 1 per cent. extra, declared by the Steel directors is less than most persons familiar with the steel trade expected. It will probably hurt the stock market.

Cotton and provisions were materially higher. At one time the March cotton option was up 116 points from its low figure, perk was up 187 points, and May 97 points. Wheat options were up from 4¼ to 6¼ points from the low figure of the day.

ASPHALT STOCK BOOMS.

Introduction into congress of a bill appropriating $200,000,000 for road building was reflected in higher prices for asphalt, oil and tire stocks. The stocks showing the most activity were General Asphalt and Keystone Tire on the curb, while in the regular market Kelly-Springfield, Goodrich, United States Rubber and petroleum stocks in general were strong.

Hide and Leather preferred was said to have a short interest of about 20,000 shares entrenched behind it for the development of this short interest is the conflicting opinion regarding the future of the leather business.

It is probable that a larger extra dividend would have been declared by the steel directors if the government not been made from Washington the previous day that the Senate and House had agreed upon the war tax bill. Passage of the bill by a Democratic Congress is considered in the financial world as a Republican development because the country is left to face foreign trade with no tariff to protect American industry. It may be that American industry will need no protection for a year or two.

COTTON OPTIONS RISE.

The rise in cotton options is very largely the result of the cut in ocean freight rates. The rate was cut from $2.50 a bale to Liverpool from south Atlantic ports and from $3.50 a bale from gulf ports.

Professional traders are not optimistic over the immediate future of the market, because they say United States Steel should sell above par on its present dividend.

REDUCE EXTRA STEEL DIVIDEND TO 1 PER CENT.

New York, Jan. 29.—The United States Corporation today declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ on the preferred stock, but reduced the extra dividend from 2 to 1 per cent. The regular quarterly dividend of 1¼ per cent. was declared on the preferred stock, payable February 27 to stock of record of February 7.

The common dividend is payable March 29 to stock of record on February 28. Net earnings after deduction of war taxes were $26,754,155, compared with $30,000,000 in the previous quarter, and $43,-724,125 a year ago.

New York Cotton Market

New York, Jan. 28.—Favorable cables helped the cotton market at the start, as did the strength in stocks. Liverpool and Wall Street bought and there was some buying also by shorts. The market closed strong. Prices for the day were:

American Brass Earnings

Earnings of the American Brass Company for 1918 amounted to $3,202,-226, compared to $7,109,172 for 1917. The December 31 last balance sheet shows cash $2,081,246 against $1,756,165 in 1917; bills receivable $692,819 against $758,827; accounts receivable $7,530,524 against $7,501,595; accounts payable, $1,023,629 against $1,763,651; surplus $17,455,852 against $16,253,-425; total assets $47,370,243 against $46,159,546. Dividends last year totalled $2,000,000, the same as before; they amounted to $5,675,000. Net profits in 1918 were equal to $7.16 per share on the $12,000,000 capital stock, compared with $47.29 in 1917, and $72.66 per share in 1916.

Cotton Mill Curtailment

A New Bedford dispatch says that cotton manufacturing in that city and Fall River have come to the conclusion that material curtailment of production cannot be avoided and each manufacturer is left to cut down his production in the way best suited to his case. It is expected that the majority will adopt a shortened working schedule rather than to stop altogether.

Dividend Declarations

Imperial Tobacco Company has declared a final dividend of 6% per cent. and bonus of 5% pence per share, both free of income tax. Annual report shows addition of 1,000,000 pounds carried to reserve account.

Lowell Electric Light Corporation has declared a quarterly dividend of $2.50 per share, payable February 1 to stock of record January 27.

Canadian Foundries & Forging Company has declared usual quarterly dividend of 2 per cent. on the common and 3½ per cent. on the preferred stocks, both payable February 15 on stock of record January 31.

Keep the Flag Afloat Over a Government-Owned Marine

In opening at Washington the first American after-the-war conference on shipping, Senator Ransdell submitted thirteen questions which merit widespread attention. We cite them and briefly comment upon them:

(1.) Shall we have a big American merchant marine, carrying not less than two-thirds of our foreign commerce?

Clearly, yes. Never again should this rich nation be dependent upon foreign bottoms for the transport of troops, supplies or the major portions of its peaceful commerce.

(2.) Shall our merchant marine be so handled as to become an effective naval reserve in time of war?

To this, too, our recent war experience makes the answer obvious.

(3.) Shall the Shipping Board carry out its program of constructing the large number of ships under contracts made during the stress of war emergency at high prices for labor and materials, many of the vessels not being especially well adapted for peaceful commerce, or shall the board cancel contracts when the resultant damage to be paid by the government would not exceed one-third of the cost to complete vessels?

(4.) Shall the big fleet we now possess and which is rapidly growing larger be owned and operated by the government or be sold to private persons on reasonable terms as to price and conditions of payment?

Upon the answer to question 4 largely depends the answer to question 3. If the United States is to control its merchant marine through government ownership and operation, instead of canceling contracts for ships ordered but not built, it might wish, so far as possible, to revise those contracts with a view to better adapting those vessels to peaceful commerce. Before we consider the pivotal question of government ownership, let us first scrutinize the remaining inquiries:

(5.) Shall the government pay subsidies to encourage shipping, and if so how and to what extent?

(6.) Shall all American seamen be enlisted in the naval reserve and their salaries be so supplemented by the government that seafaring business would prove attractive to vigorous, energetic Americans, and vessel owners be compelled to pay no more than the standard wage on British ships of the same type?

(7.) Shall the government create a big private corporation in which it is a stockholder with certain powers of control to own and operate as a private enterprise our present and prospective fleet with a guaranteed interest on the investment of not less than 3½ per cent.?

(8.) Shall the government lease its ships on time charters under which it furnishes the vessels and feeds and pays the crew, so that a private person who charters and operates them is placed upon terms of perfect equality with his foreign rival?

(9.) Shall the government reserve from sale a large acreage of oil lands and operate them on government account, sell the fuel oil at seaboard to American ships at cost, thereby supplying our merchant vessels with much cheaper fuel than their foreign competitors can secure?

(10.) In view of the marvellously successful work of the naval overseas transportation service which was manning on the first of this month 357 ships of 2,800,000 deadweight tons in transporting men and materials in the great war to and from Europe, what part shall our navy play in upbuilding our merchant marine?

(11.) As there is the most intimate connection between all freight moving agencies, shall we advocate the immediate creation by Congress of a Secretary of Transportation and place under him all bureaus, boards and commissions closely related to transportation by land, water and air?

(12.) Shall we organize here and now a voluntary patriotic association with headquarters in Washington, officered by the biggest men in the nation, to constitute a clearing house of marine thought to educate the people to the countless benefits that would result from owning and operating a large fleet of American ships and to crystallize public opinion in favor of a wise, comprehensive shipping policy?

(13.) Bearing in mind that "united we stand, divided we fall," shall each of us, while urging his own opinions forcibly, do so in a kind spirit, with an open mind, determined that we will all get together on some practical marine policy to submit to Congress for immediate enactment, and shall we create a legislative committee to present our views and assist in securing their adoption?

The important consideration in all these details is to secure for American productive enterprise and for American consumptive needs a sufficient shipping service, American in ownership, control and conditions of operation, to insure dependability, reasonableness of rates and the maintenance afloat of the American standard of living and of labor.

This has not been secured in the past through the instrumentality of private ownership; and the chief reason given for the failure of private ownership has been the impossibility of meeting foreign shipping competition under American labor requirements without a government subsidy.

Before the needs of war had impelled our government to take over the operation of American shipping and to supplement it by foreign charters and by emergency building, there were Americans, not of the profiteering type, who saw so clearly the desirability of making this country independent of foreign interests for the transport of its commerce that they were willing to subsidize private American shipowners as the shortest, though not necessarily the best, way of getting an adequate American merchant marine.

A subsidy of private interest for private profit is indefensible.

Furthermore, the war has reversed the conditions under which advocates of private subsidy were willing to vote public money into private pockets "in order to put our flag upon the sea."

Our flag is now on the sea by the act, not of private enterprise, but of public necessity.

There is no subsidy to any private interest and no flagrant profiteering in service rates.

It is as important to the shipper by boat as to the shipper by rail that rates shall be fair, uniform and stable.

Private control of ocean transport has been characterized by many instances of unfairness, lack of uniformity and instability.

The practices which have made private ownership of the utilities for transportation objectionable on land, so much so as to call for increasing though increasingly unsuccessful regulation by government, have prevailed in equal if not greater enormity upon the sea.

Thanks to the compulsions of war, we have found the way to overcome them and to start anew on a scale of common fairness, with the power of the world's greatest nation behind our floating flag.

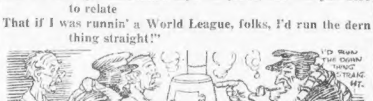
Patter and Chatter

By William F. Kirk

"I SEE in my weekly paper," said dear old Deacon Brown,
Addressing his congregation in the general store downtown,
"I see in the weekly paper a yarn that made me grin—
They're going to have a World League now, with all them nations in.
Them nations makes one powerful mob, according to my idee.
But this is the way I'd tackle the job, if they ever called on me:

"I'D get them nations together, jest like our Town Board meets,
And I'd tell 'em flat where they was at, as soon as they took their seats!
I'd get them nations together, tell 'em what was what, by heck!
And the first cuss there that objected, I'd throw him out on his neck!
I wouldn't make no big, loud noise, ner look for any fight,
But if I was runnin' a World League, boys, I'd run the dern thing right!

"I'D rig up a lot of them by-laws, and a constitution, tew!
And them pesky fools would mind them rules, now I'm a-tellin' yew!
I was tellin' my wife last evenin', but she cut my talk in half—
She 'lowed that she had a coldsore and it hurt her mouth to laugh!
But we ain't got time these days for jokes, and I'm jest here to relate
That if I was runnin' a World League, folks, I'd run the dern thing straight!"



An Essay on Leagues

The first League on record was formed in the well-known Garden of Eden. Adam and the serpent were the charter members. The serpent was alone in the league until he took Adam in.

Then, in bewildering succession, came league after league. Men found the advantage of being leaguers, and the habit grew until there were leagues of every sort, from the famous "Half a league, half a league, half a league onward" to the Epworth League, and later the American and National League. Few of these organizations have stayed the test of time.

Now we have the League of Nations in the making, and all good Bostonians are looking forward to the time when this League will have its first Winter meeting at the Copley Plaza.

This is to be the biggest of all Big Leagues, and all of us are to play in it, though few will be asked to sign contracts and receive salaries. Patter and Chatter would like to suggest the motto for this organization: "United We Add and Multiply—Divided We Subtract!"

Peeking Ahead

The World League may be out of print
One hundred years from now.
There may be calls for Red Cross lint
One hundred years from now.
The Private may salute the Cap
And bravely march away to scrap,
But you and I won't care a rap
One hundred years from now!

Economic Questions

Editor Boston American:

I have been a pretty regular reader of the American for years, mainly because of its editorials and attitude on economic questions. Recently the paper is doubly interesting on account of the disclosures made during the Senate investigation and the column contributed by Arthur Brisbane, which is an education in itself. The situation confronting Europe in August, 1914, and continuing to the present time, including the attack upon Mr. Hearst, remind me forcibly of that wonderful descriptive prose poem (am I right), by Campenella, "The People." No doubt you have knowledge of that monk who lived nearby 200 years ago.

Much has since been written, dealing with government and man's struggle for even bare necessities, but all the conditions criticised in all these modern writings are depicted in "The People," and to my mind nothing has been or will be written which gives a clearer view of the subject matter.

While Campenella was a Socialist, I question if he would indorse the present soap-box orators who would abolish the wage system, profit and money, but he surely would abolish war. My purpose in writing you is to ask you to devote some space in the American to this wonderful man and reprint "The People." Mr. Brisbane can do it full justice, and it more nearly describes the efforts of those who would crucify Mr. Hearst than anything I have seen.

THE MOTHER MARTYR AND HER EARLY MISTAKE

By Mrs. Wilson Woodrow

THE most dreadful thing in the world is the unnecessary waste of life.

I have received a letter, many pages long, detailing an example of such waste. The woman who has written it was married when she was seventeen to a man who, she later discovered, was a confirmed loafer and an habitual drunkard.

During their first miserable years of marriage they drifted about from one place to another. Now and then at what time he could spare between sprees he worked a little, but these occasions became fewer and fewer.

They had several children which she says were never properly clothed and fed, and it was only by a miracle that they ever all had shoes on their feet. She worked day and night, and was the sole support of the family, including her husband.

A Tragic Plight

She is now, she writes, in the late forties. The children are grown up and gone their various ways, leaving home as soon as possible and putting as much distance between it and them as lay within their power. Her comment upon this fact is:

"I think they love me, but that is all there is to it. It is all they can do to look out for themselves, and they want to forget their home."

The result is that now she finds herself approaching the age of fifty without a decent home and with the necessity of caring, not only for herself, but also for a husband who is a degraded and disgusting companion and who constantly abuses her and frequently threatens her life. The children she has reared under disheartening circumstances are of no assistance to her. And she is a woman with a longing for better things and an appreciation of them.

Such cases are far from uncommon. We hear of them and sigh, shake our heads and say, "very sad, very," and let it go at that.

But what can be done?

It would be hard to say. No one, with the best intentions in the world, could hope at this late day to reform the husband, and it would be a difficult task to round up the children and force them to contribute to their mother's support. They are probably struggling to get a foothold themselves.

As things are, if a girl gets a good husband and has any sense of responsibility herself, the marriage is apt to turn out happily. If she contracts an unfortunate marriage, she is the victim of chance, and her helpless children suffer the consequences.

Facing the Facts

Suppose that she had then looked the facts in the face and had said to herself:

"I am not giving either my husband or my children or myself a square deal. I am encouraging him in his bad habits by giving him a home where he can loaf and idle and recover from his spree. I have no right to subject my children to such an influence. It is wrong for me to give him the money for drink which should go to provide decent clothes and nourishing food for them. I have deprived him of the necessity of working in order to live, which might have saved him. It would have been far better for him if I had said:

"'If you come here and threaten my life and abuse me, I shall have you arrested as a drunkard, a loafer, and also for non-support and assault.'"

But, poor woman! She had not been trained to face facts. She had not been taught to do anything but drift. She didn't run away. She has lived her life without hope or joy in it, and has played the game the best way she knew how. She should have a pension for the rest of her life, with the provision attached that she spend it exclusively on herself and her own comforts.

The Elephant Has 6 Children
Nations Protecting Barbarism
A Law to Pay the Soldiers
Turgot and Clay as Warnings

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Copyright, 1919.

A bill is introduced to carry out the suggestion made in this newspaper that pay of soldiers, sailors and marines be continued while they hunt for work.

The bill suggests one year's pay for men that have been under fire, good. But every man taken from his work and compelled now to hunt for a job should get at least six months' full pay.

The President suggests that colonies taken from Germany be internationalized, cared for by the nations combined and, presumably, allowed to run themselves as soon as they are mentally full grown.

Judging by photographs of native gentlemen carrying German officials on their shoulders, and by costumes, very primitive, of native ladies carrying bunches of bananas on their heads, how long will it take those ladies and gentlemen of German Africa to grow up to self-determination?

It will take certainly not fewer than five hundred or a thousand centuries.

What changes will occur in that period? And must the United States, during those years, do its share of governing and policing far off Africa?

Most seriously the world must ask what the result will be if the Powers succeed in protecting barbarous people against outsiders and against themselves, thus enabling them to breed ignorance and savagery on a gigantic scale, protected from the processes that would kill them off.

Suppose we had fed, protected, encouraged and multiplied our red Indians along the Atlantic, instead of killing them as rapidly as possible? We should undoubtedly have thirty or forty millions of them now; what a race problem would that present?

What race problems are the well meaning peace delegates preparing for future generations if they succeed in checking processes that have been wiping out inferior types of the last half million years?

* * *

The slowest breeding animal in the world, according to the distinguished British scientist, Sir Ray Lankester, is the elephant. Yet, if it were protected from itself and the hunter, it would soon cover the earth and crowd out all other creatures.

Lankester says of the elephant:

"It commences to breed at thirty years of age, dies at one hundred and has six young in the interval. After 750 years there would be nearly nineteen million elephants alive descended from the original pair."

How many barbarous inhabitants would there be in the German part of Africa and other undeveloped regions if international benevolence should protect them as we protect the animals in our national parks? And what would the world do with that sudden terrific supply of uncivilized humanity? It is dangerous to interfere with Nature's cruel processes.

The country, apparently, is to control the telephones and telegraphs until the end of this year. After that private ownership again for the wires, and probably for railroads also.

Those private owners will look back one day with regret to the generous days of Woodrow Wilson, when they could have unloaded their properties and got rid of risk and responsibility at the highest prices.

* * *

The French nobles denounced Count Turgot as a traitor to his class when he suggested to the King that French lands be bought at a fair price from twenty-five thousand noblemen and the peasants allowed to buy them. A little later many of those noblemen rode on their way to the guillotine, others in exile. The lands were divided, and six million peasants own land in France now. No peasant-owned French soil in Turgot's day.

* * *

Henry Clay was denounced as a traitor to the South when he suggested that the government should settle the slave question by buying the slaves for twelve hundred million dollars. He was attacked savagely, although he was careful to say that the North should be compelled to provide all the money. The South later made a worse bargain.

But nobody learns from the experience of others, and today's private ownership gentlemen will be no exception to the rule.
